Tax Pledge Break Laid To Leader

Republicans and some Democrats tore into Governor George M. Leader's $1,843,583,666 budget which he presented to the General Assembly Tuesday, demanding that it pass a $411,000,000 "classified income tax to bring it into balance."

Wages and salaries would be taxed at a rate of $10 per $1,000, with a deduction provided for the first $1,000 of income, and would be collected by employer withholding.

Governor Leader said he hopes the withholding can be started by July 1.

Taxes on other earned income would be collected by "declaration," as is the Federal income tax. Leader would have the four classes of unearned income paid on a calendar basis, retroactive to January 1 of this year.

The governor's $1,843,583,666 budget was by far the biggest in Pennsylvania history.

The income tax was only part of the new revenue Leader needs to meet his proposed expenditures.

Leader also asked that: Business and corporations be tapped for an additional $118,080,000.

Motorists pay an additional $81,000,000 in the form of a penny more on the gasoline tax and a $5 increase in license fees.

Truckers pay an additional $18,000,000 in license fee increases of varying amounts.

The biggest single item in the budget is $136,470,000 to finance the Department of Public Assistance for the next two years.

The smallest item—$600 is to maintain roads in the Complanter Indian Reservation in Warren County.

In proposing the $411,000,000 income tax, Governor Leader skirted his campaign pledge of "no wage tax" by establishing five categories of income to be taxed at different rates.

Coroner William D. McClelland of Pittsburgh, who opposed Governor Leader for the Democratic nomination, has accused the governor of breaking his "pledged word."

"The Governor's 'new concept in taxation' as advanced in his speech must be a shock to the people of Pennsylvania. Only a few short months ago he was telling the people he had the answers to Pennsylvania's problems, but time after time he stated he had no wage or income tax in mind."

"How can he, as governor, with any self-respect or any regard for his pledged word, come out flatfootedly for the vicious and oppressive wage tax? It is contrary to all the principles of the Democratic party. Had Mr. Leader, as a candidate, spoken as he does now, he would not now be governor of Pennsylvania."

Dr. George F. Dunkelberger Gives Memorial Gift to Waynesburg College

A gift of $600 to cover the cost of fireproofing his old class room has been received by Waynesburg College from Dr. George F. Dunkelberger, former dean and professor of education, who is now professor emeritus at Susquehanna University, Selingsgrove, Pa.

"The gift is as a memorial to his wife, who is also well remembered by former students who studied under Dr. Dunkelberger when he taught at Waynesburg from 1921 through 1925."

His room was on the northwest corner of the first floor of Miller Hall, the college administration building.

In announcing the gift, President Paul R. Stewart of Waynesburg, said Dr. Dunkelberger was one of the most highly regarded educators in Pennsylvania, and that he was one who had a special talent for helping undergraduates correlate the theory of education with the practical day to day problems of the classroom. After leaving Waynesburg, Dr. Dunkelberger returned to his alma mater, Susquehanna University, where he was head of the department of education until his retirement from active teaching a few years ago.

He had also taught at California State Teachers College before coming to Waynesburg.

Polio Vaccination Slated In County For Monday

To date 1,804 first and second-grade Greene County school children will receive the Salk polio vaccine which a few days ago was pronounced 80 to 90 per cent effective in preventing infantile paralysis.

Dr. W. B. Clendenning of Waynesburg, state medical director in the county, stated Wednesday, it is hoped the vaccine will arrive in time to begin vaccination Monday. Vaccination will be given in cooperation with the County Medical Society and school nurses.

Meantime, Dr. Jonas Salk and his corps of research assistants, headed by Dr. L. J. Lewis, formerly of Waynesburg, are concentrating on the task of perfecting the vaccine.

When they returned from Ann Arbor, Michigan, where the vaccine was evaluated by the University of Michigan, they were given a tremendous ovation at the county airport in Pittsburgh.

A bit overwhelmed by public acclaim and interest, reflected in demands of press, radio, TV, movies, plus other as yet untabulated requests, Dr. Salk expressed a desire to get back into the "role of investigator," in the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center.

One of his problems right now is "to continue my work. What is the role of someone in science? What is the role of the investigator?"

He promised "new development," adding "that's obvious." In 3 1/2 years his research has given the world its first potent vaccine against polio, cruelest of the cripples.

Asked whether he's taken action on the flood of different offers which have poured in, Salk said wryly:

"I haven't found anything as urgent as the development of polio vaccine."

Bills have been introduced to award state and congressional medals of honor to Dr. Salk. A measure has also been drawn to give him a yearly $10,000 federal pension.

The Pioneer History of Greene County, Penna.

By L. K. EVANS

On another occasion while rambling in his favorite haunts in the neighborhood of Wheeling, Lewis Wetzel took refuge in a deserted cabin during a stormy night. By means of a few pieces of boards which he found at hand he prepared himself a place in the loft to sleep. Just as he had got himself comfortably fixed six marauding Indians entered the luckless cabin, built a fire and prepared a homely supper. He watched their movements with terrible interest, determined to leap into their midst and sell his life as dearly as possible, or escape amid the general confusion. Fortunately they did not observe him and soon the whole party was sound asleep. Softly as a cat he descended from his perch and vanished from that old shanty, which had seemed the very jaws of death. But once out in the free air of his native wood he was not content to slink away and leave so good an opportunity to vent his vengeance unimproved. Concealing himself in rifle range of the cabin's door he patiently awaited the appearance of one of the Indians. Soon after break of day a brawny red skin came to the door, yawned and stretched, and fell dead from heart disease, superinduced by a leaden missile from Wetzel's gun. Waiting only to assure himself of the effect of his shot he darted away, and soon put himself at a safe distance from the startled and enraged companions of his victim.

About the year 1789, General Harman, having erected a fort where Marietta now stands, sent some white men with a flag of truce inviting the adjacent Indian tribes to attend a parley at the fort to conclude a treaty of peace. A large number of Indians accepted the invitation and encamped on the Muskingum a few miles above its mouth. Harman issued a proclamation giving notice that a cessation of hostilities was mutually agreed upon pending the effort to conclude a treaty. The utter disregard which Indians had paid former "most solemn treaties" was not calculated to inspire great confidence in any professions of good faith they might now make, and the frontiersmen were disposed to show very little respect for Harman's project.

Entertaining views of this kind Lewis Wetzel concluded to pay Fort Harman a visit while stipulations were in progress. For purposes not altogether pacific in character he took Veach Dickerson, a noted woodsman, into his confidence. They planned an adventure of the most reckless daring, at once defying Indian prowess and military authority.

Secreting themselves in the ambush near the path leading from the fort to the camp they awaited the coveted opportunity. At length a solitary Indian appeared riding on horseback at top speed. They challenged him, but he heeded them not. They fired, but he did not come down. Knowing, however, that the alarm would soon be spread that a peaceable Indian had been shot at and that they should incur the resentment of both the Indians and the whites, they lost no time in getting back to the settlement. As the neighbors knew the secret of their expedition they accosted Wetzel on his return with the inevitable, "what luck?" The sullen answer was "bad luck, we saw but one red skin, and he riding at the top of speed. We fired at him but he rode off scratching his back as if stung by a yallar jacket." The truth was they had shot him through the hip and the lower part of the body—a mortal wound. He reached the fort but expired immediately after. He proved to be a savage of no little celebrity.

Lewis Wetzel was immediately suspected of committing the outrage, and General Harman deputed Captain Kingsbury with a company of men to proceed to the Mingo bottoms and take him "dead or alive"—a fruitless undertaking, for Wetzel and his clan of settlers were not to be molested for the trivial affair of killing an Indian—an achievement, in their opinion, of the highest merit. When the object of Kingsbury became known the resentment and fury of Wetzel and his friends assumed the character of the most desperate frenzy, and they resolved to ambush and annihilate the whole command. But Major McMahan—a prudent and sagacious man—counseled them to moderation till he should obtain a conference with Kingsbury. Seeking an interview he told the Captain how utterly futile any attempt to arrest Wetzel would prove. He advised him to desist, and the advice was heeded. Kingsbury returned with his men, and Wetzel regarded the matter as finally and forever adjusted.

Shortly after this, Wetzel, feeling free to roam at will, got into a canoe and set off down the Ohio, for a visit to Kentucky. He stopped for the night with his friend Hamilton Carr, who had settled on an island near Fort Harman. By some unaccountable means General Harman was apprized of the fact. A guard was sent over to the island, which surprised our hero while sleeping. He was overpowered by numbers, bound hand and foot, and taken thence to a guard room, where he was loaded with irons. Thus the mighty Sampson of the frontier suffered the ignominy of shackles at the house of his friends.—L. K. EVANS.

Our last sketch left our mighty warrior writhing beneath the ignominy of a felon's fetters. Viewed through the spectacles of justice now in vogue, he deserved his fate. But in the light of the frontiersmen who were the victims of Indian treachery, atrocity and heartless savagery, the penalty inflicted was simply an outrage on public decency—certainly a villainous disregard of popular sentiment. To one of his spirit and habits the handcuffs and hobbles were more terrible than death itself.

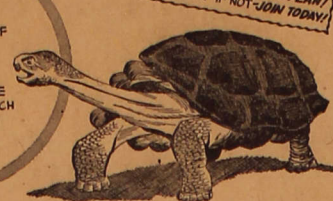

Shortly after his incarceration he requested an interview with General Harman. The General granted the favor. Wetzel frankly admitted having shot the Indian, but entertaining such holy horror at the thought of being hung like a dog, he begged that he might be handed over to the "tender mercies" of his relentless foes. Let a circle be formed of the bravest braves, armed to the teeth, and let me be placed in the midst, tomahawk in hand, and then let us "fight it out." Harman replied that he was an officer appointed by law, by which he had to be governed, and dare not, if he would, grant such an unnatural request; which terminated the interview. After a few days of galling confinement, he again sent for the General, who was prompt to go to him. He said: "General, I was never confined before. It will kill me if you do not give me the privilege of walking about." The hobbles were promptly removed, but the handcuffs were left securely fastened, and he was permitted to walk about the point at the mouth of the Muskingum, under the eye of the guard, who had instructions to watch him closely. Upon gaining his liberty he would kick up his heels, caper and prance like a colt that had broken loose from the stall, greatly to the amusement of his guards. He would run a few yards at the top of speed, as though he meant to break away from the guards, then as quickly return to them. This process he repeated over and over, venturing a little farther away each succeeding time. Finally, resolving on liberty or immediate death, he summoned all his energy, made a sudden dart and bounded beyond the lines, and sought shelter in the woods hard by. His movements were so quick and unexpected that the guards were struck with surprise, from which they did not recover till he was near a hundred yards away. They all fired, but missed. They pursued but once in the woods he eluded their vigilance. He was so well acquainted with the position that he knew just where to find a safe place to hide. In a dense thicket not far off a tree had fallen across a log and matted the brush very close. Under this he squeezed himself. He had not lain there long till the soldiers and Indians ordered in pursuit by Harman, began to swarm the woods in every direction. Two Indians penetrated the thicket and stood upon the log directly above him. His heart beat so violently that he greatly feared its thumping would reveal his place of concealment to the sensitive ear of the wary savages. But they shortly passed on, greatly to his relief, and the night coming on, all hands gave up the quest and left him alone in the thick darkness. What was he now to do? His hands were firmly secured with iron cuffs. He knew of no friend on that side of the river to give him friendly aid. He could not construct a raft. He dared not attempt to swim the Ohio while fettered thus. With the gloomiest forebodings he emerged from the thicket, and by a somewhat circuitous route reached the river three or four miles below, at a lonely place. On the opposite shore was the friendly cabin of Isaac Wiseman. Early in the morning he saw his friend in a canoe fishing. Fearing to call lest a lurking foe should pounce upon him, he attracted his friend's attention by a splash in the water and then waved his hand and beckoned him to come. Wiseman readily aided his old friend. He conveyed him to his cabin and with the aid of hammer and chisel knocked off his fetters and set him free. After recruiting his energies by a day and night's rest, he procured from his friend a gun, ammunition and blanket and set out in a canoe for the land of Kentucky, where he would engage anew in his favorite adventures, safe from the reach of Harman and his men.

By W. ROBERT THOMPSON

"Access to Courts"

That a judge should not permit private interviews, arguments or circumstances designed to influence his judicial action, when interests to be affected thereby are not represented before him.

Ordinarily all communications of counsel to the judge intended to influence action should be made known to opposing counsel.

Only on rare occasions should matters be heard in the Courts Chambers and the Court should never discuss prospective or pending actions with the litigant.

The public has an interest in all matters and all business should be conducted in open Court in the Court room.

This refers only to the business of the Court. Other than that, there should be no difference between any private citizen and a judge. Really, a judge owes a duty to his community to be available for social matters so long as it does not interfere with his primary duties in Court.

Fifty-Year History of Greene County Sports

By GEORGE N. THOMAS

RIFLE TEAMS

Most sports originated in fun and eventually became big business and professionalized.

Rifle shooting, on the other hand, underwent a different course. It began as a serious thing—that of survival—in this nation, and has become a sport enjoyed by a select crowd who probably are the most ardent fans of all.

Rifles have been a part of Americana from the first settler. The first frontiersmen in Greene County carried rifles for protection from beasts and savages and as a source for food.

The rifle was a man's bedfellow, his lifeline and his accuracy with it was his strength.

Long before the rifle ceased to play its important part in man's struggle for survival, communities had sprung up among the county's rolling hills.

Even those hardy early settlers sought some sort of relaxation, and they often organized "shoots" with which they could extract some jovial moments while attempting to establish the best "shot" in the neighborhood.

Some men valued their rifles more than anything they owned. They pampered, babied and placed high costs on the iron rods.

In bartering, rifles played a big part. A good one brought a domestic animal, piece of land and a variety of articles.

A man to the north of the county, for instance, traded his wife and two children for a bicycle, accordion and a rifle.

And another less ambitious man traded his wife for a gun and a kettle.

The wife-receiver, however, revolted in a few days and returned the wife, demanding in a loud voice, his gun and kettle back. The entire transaction only served to prove that the husband knew all along what he was doing.

But circumstances such as those happened rarely and county residents, if you'll excuse a pun, drew a charge out of it.

Early in county history, shooting for fun was confined to "turkey shoots."

That simply was placing a live turkey either between two logs or in a deep box, and contestants took a limited number of shots at the gobbler's head. The lucky shooter won the pot (of money). That game is illegal now.

Then when that game became boring, general store "cowboys" came up with "grocery shoots."

That practice involved placing a target at some distance, permitting each aspirant a single shot, with the closest hit winning the week's supply of groceries.

Shoots of this sort continued until the 1920s and 1930s.

Through the first part of this century, informal groups met privately and conducted contests among themselves.

Because of transportation problems, they didn't want to go far from town; and because of the noise, nobody wanted them too near to them. Danger of flying bullets seldom caused consternation. Shooters were quite careful.

Byron Daily was among the early marksmen at meets held in the Wilson Building, and he was presented a handsome rifle.

It wasn't until the early 1920s that anyone gave serious consideration to team organization, rather than individual merit.

About this time, among the most popular games were "String Shoots," "Shot for Tack," and "Scatter Guns."

"String Shoots" involved one or more persons shooting five times at a target.

The referee or judge then measured the distance from the bulls-eye to each hole, this distance accumulating on a single strand of string. The person with the shortest string won the contest, and the money bet.

"Shot for Tack" was much quicker and simpler. Each person took just one shot at a thumb tack placed on a tree or support. Nearest hit, or direct hit, won the prize.

"Scatter Guns" was played with live birds or pigeons.

Shooters were placed a given distance, then a judge, who was well paid, pulled string, collapsing a box and releasing the target bird.

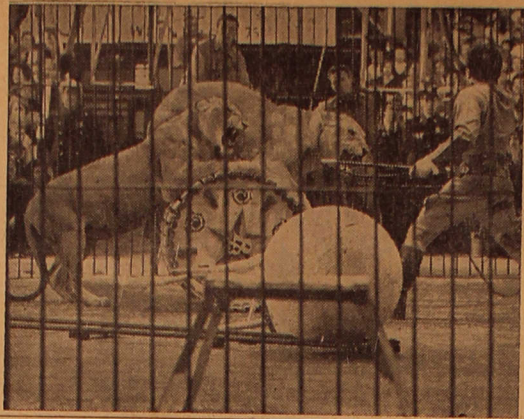

The moment the bird took to the air, it was a fair target. A hit or miss was thus recorded.

To make the game reasonably fair, contestants were not allowed to fire while the bird still was on the ground. It had to be airborne to be live game.

Many smart birds, sensed the situation, walked away—and lived to fly again.

Wheeling Downs Opens Saturday

—Wheeling, W. Va.—

Boston Doge, the red-hot Kentucky Derby candidate, will have a promising half-brother running at Wheeling Downs during the 32-day spring meeting which opens Saturday.

And Trainer R. L. Mitchell expects big things of that two-year-old colt, Flying Doge.

In his second start of his career on March 18, at Oaklawn, Flying Doge romped to a four-length victory to break his maiden. And the colt figures to be extra sharp for the competition at the Downs.

Flying Doge, whose sire is The Doge, is owned by Virgil Haycraft. Haycraft is one of seven different owners for which Mitchell trains. He has a total of nine thoroughbreds under his supervision.

Mitchell trains Resultin and Little Papoose for Virgil Hise; Chester's Girl for D. Schurman; McCracken Boy and Miss Zilt for Mary Mitchell; Sky Gold for Howard Bulluck; Sky Fiesta for M. F. Underwood, and Little Dish for Paul Youkellis.

So Mitchell probably will have more "bosses,"—seven—than any other trainer at the Downs.

The opening on Saturday will start the 75th year of racing at the half-mile track and General Manager William G. Lias has pronounced the racing strip in its best condition since he took over the plant in 1946, resurfacing of the backstretch having been completed this spring.

The plant has also been given a refurbishing with the washing down and painting of the grandstand, clubhouse and all buildings in the barn area.

Post time will be 2:15 daily with eight races scheduled on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays, and nine on Wednesdays and Saturdays. The meeting will close Memorial Day.

Stall Superintendent Dick Schneider announced that all stalls will be occupied by opening day.

At least 13 of the stables are coming to the Downs either for the first time or are returning after an absence of a number of years.

Among them are J. Bringhurst who arrived from Charles Town with five horses; J. Carter of New Orleans, seven; Dan Chamblin, Berryville, Va., 11; E. J. Daniels, Rhode Island, 11; Jake Freshwater, Van Wert, Ohio, 11; A. R. Finlayson of Pennsylvania, six; J. C. Ellis, Henderson, Kentucky, 21.

Also checking in were T. Johnson of Cleveland, four; A. R. Johnson, Columbus, seven; J. Nihart, Evansville, Ind., five; W. Pritchett, Jr., St. Matthews, S. C., eight; Frank Smith, Jr., Mullica Hill, N. J., nine and Harold White, White Acres Farm, Laconia, Ind., nine.

Olympic Head Still Favors Aussie Site

—Sydney, Australia—

Avery Brundage, the American who heads the International Olympic Committee said Sunday he believed Australia could be ready for the 1956 Olympic Games but warned that he was not sure they would be.

Brundage, who had a long talk with Prime Minister Robert Menzies and William Kent Hughes, chairman of the Olympic Organizing Committee at Canberra, told reporters at the Sydney Airport that the games "can still be taken away from Melbourne" but added "the chances are very remote."

Brundage has completed his tour of inspection of Australian Olympic plans and was awaiting the plane scheduled to fly him to Tokyo.

"I am very happy about what talks with Menzies and Kent Hughes and I am sure Menzies understands the importance of the games. I think he is now more interested in making the games a triumph than anybody else," Brundage said.

He revealed that there were several cities in various countries still anxious to stage the 1956 games and said they were capable of doing it even at this late date. But he said he wanted Australia to do the job.

"I am confident Australia can do the job but what we want now is action which has been lamentably lacking for the last six years. I received promises before and even now I am not sure the work will be done. But I believe that if Australia gets behind this thing the deadline can be met," he said.

Brundage was severely critical of Australia's progress in completing plans for the games. "Up to this minute the record is deplorable. Everything should have been finished by now. Nothing is finished," he said.

But Brundage would not reveal what he would recommend to the International Olympic Committee when it meets to discuss the situation in June.

"I examined plans and looked over the program. If those plans are executed and the program carried out the games will be a success but I can't say whether the plans will be executed. So I cannot predict my recommendation at this time," he said.
