Just Thinking!

By JIM DENT

About a year ago a few people assembled in the Fort Jackson Hotel in the interest of some forgotten souls those suffering from Muscular Dystrophy.

Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Clark Mr. and Mrs. James D. Thomas Mr. Wood Williamson Mr. Richard Morgan and the Editor and I formed an auxiliary to the Muscular Dystrophy Association of America.

Unknown and unsusung in Greene County.

There is no known cure for Muscular Dystrophy

Several severe cases are prevalent in Greene County.

Millions are being spent in research but no real encouragement as yet.

The local chapter put on a drive for money for therapeutic treatment—the only known relief.

We called upon Volunteer Firemen of Greene County to help us.

Without starting a fire the results were enough to make your heart tingle with warmth.

The Firemen solicited and contributed the following amounts:

Waynesburg Firemen	$545.75
Carmichaels Firemen	120.82
Nemacolin Firemen	167.40
Rices Landing Firemen	230.16
Crucible Firemen	212.05
Greensboro Firemen	73.62
Jefferson Firemen	104.13
Clarksville Firemen	101.39
Mather Firemen	140.83
Bobtown Firemen	72.10
Mt. Morris Firemen	61.00

In addition to this Washington County Firemen kicked in with:

Millsboro Firemen	$122.91
Vestaburg Firemen	109.51
Fredericktown Firemen	247.10

Making a total for our valiant firemen of $2,307.77.

Gentlemen: We consider this a job well done!

Attends State Farm Co-Op Meeting

Harley Swart of Waynesburg, represented Greene County farmers at the annual meeting of the Pennsylvania Farm Bureau Co-operative Association in Harrisburg on Monday and Tuesday.

Mr. Swart, a director of the statewide cooperative, is also secretary of Greene Farm Bureau which last year supplied county farmers with more than $299,000 worth of farm supplies and marketing services. More than 1,000 farmers of this area regularly use the service of Greene Farm Bureau, which they own.

In addition, he took part in a special Farm Bureau Directors' Day observance at Hershey on Wednesday. Approximately 400 directors of local Farm Bureau organizations and Cooperative Distribution Association stockholder-delegates attended the Hershey meeting.

Thirty-four local farmer co-operators throughout the state own and control Pennsylvania Farm Bureau which pools their purchases of farm supplies on a statewide basis to achieve maximum savings for farmers.

Leader and the Deluge

PITTSBURGH POST-GAZETTE

Governor George M. Leader can blame much of his money woes on the provision of the State Constitution that forbids a governor to succeed himself in office. This provision invites an after-us-the-deluge policy in two ways:

1. It gives a governor little control over free-spending lawmakers after his first two years in office.

2. It encourages a governor simply to make do as best he can during his term and then to pass on the financial headaches to his successor.

Look what has happened in Harrisburg for a decade. Appropriations have far out-run current revenues for every biennium except one (1947-49). Nor have the lawmakers confined themselves to voting appropriations in their own biennium with little regard for where the money would come from. They have committed future legislatures and future governors to spend — and collect — big sums. Governor Leader, for example, has to get $125 million in new revenues to meet the spending pledges made by past legislatures for this biennium.

Meantime, our governors have taken little thought of taxes beyond the morrow. The State staggered along until 1953 with a patchwork of taxes, relying for its main revenue on the corporate net income tax. The State kept broadening the base of its services, but put off until the last possible moment any broadening of the base of its taxes.

Furthermore, a check of the record shows a marked tendency for recent governors to build up an on-hand surplus for their first two years in office, and then to leave the cupboard relatively bare after their last two years. After us, the deluge.

The deluge has burst upon Governor Leader. He has inherited an inadequate tax system, a fistful of spending pledges, and a deficit of $75 million. As he pointed out in his recent message, this $75 million actually comes to a deficit of $150 million. For he will have to pay off not only the $75 million by which the last legislature went into the hole, but will have to raise another $75 million to maintain that same pattern of spending in this legislature.

Governor Leader, to be sure, did not ease his predicament with his reckless campaign oratory on the sales tax and on broad-based taxes in general. But that's another story.

The story that concerns us here is the long record of bad fiscal management in Harrisburg. And that bad management, it seems to us, is built into our Constitution by the requirement that a governor can't succeed himself.

A governor who could run for a consecutive term or terms would be a more responsible governor. For one thing, he would not be in the unhappy role of lame duck for half his four-year term. Lawmakers could not ignore his direction without risk to their long-term patronage. And he would have more incentive to devise adequate tax programs — since he might have to inherit his own mess.

The people of Pennsylvania are going to be occupied in the coming months with efforts to bail the State out of its present deluge. But if they want to prevent future deluges, they will insist that a constitutional amendment to allow a governor to succeed himself be passed by this legislature and by the next, and then they will approve the amendment at the polls. This is the surest way to fiscal responsibility in Harrisburg.

Research Is Key To Growth of Coal Industry

Expressing confidence in the future of the bituminous coal industry, Clifford F. Hood, president of U. S. Steel Corporation, declared that modern research may well be the key to its continued growth. His remarks were made at the annual luncheon meeting of the members of Bituminous Coal Research, Inc., in Pittsburgh, Wednesday.

"Bituminous coal can, no doubt, maintain present markets and uncover new and more profitable uses for its products through rapid attention to research. It has been said that tomorrow's profits are governed by today's research, and perhaps it is equally true that the future of the bituminous industry may reside largely in the laboratory," he said.

After pointing out that the coal industry has many problems to be solved, Mr. Hood stated that the approach to these matters has not always been based upon sound economic principles.

"To find the solutions to the economic problems which beset the bituminous industry will require a great deal of what might be called 'management research' and a greater understanding of basic economic principles. Our vast reserves of coal, representing at the moment what many believe to be our most plentiful source of energy, will be of little value unless coal can also remain the most economical source of energy. The methods of achieving this goal do not lie in the devices of government subsidy or government regulation of competitive fuels, but rather in sound management leadership."

Mr. Hood said that through "management research" and laboratory research, bituminous coal may prove to be the most practical fuel in the development of electric power in many areas for years to come. He added that along with more efficient means of processing, preparing and transporting coal for use as fuel, the development of broader markets for by-products of coal combustion may prove to be an advantageous factor in the use of coal as a commercial fuel.

On Wrapping Fish

On Old Gold's "Truth or Consequences" television program recently, one of the questions was: "Why is it that television will never be able to replace newspapers?" The facetious "correct" answer was: "Because you can't wrap fish in a television set."

Those listeners who mistakenly think "tripe" is a fish must have been somewhat perturbed by the answer, for each night it is again proven that tripe can be wrapped in a TV tube along with other matter revolting to the average stomach.

If Mr. What's-His-Name, who conducts the Old Gold show, would really like to know why TV will never replace newspapers, I would be glad to give him a few other reasons. In fact, I shall give them whether he wants them or not.

Here are some reasons why TV will never replace newspapers:

1. Newspapers will never insist on jamming advertising down the sensitive throats of those who simply want to look over a favorite feature. "Read the ads if you like," is the newspaper attitude, while TV says, "Look at my ads or get out!"
2. One individual can read a newspaper without interfering with the peace, quiet and nervous system of other members of the household.
3. Anyone who wants specific news or feature entertainment can get it from a newspaper at a time chosen by himself instead of by a sponsor.
4. If you want to refer back to an interesting story, or bring it to someone's else's attention, the newspaper makes it possible. On TV it is lost forever in the ether.
5. Parents can let their children look through the better newspapers without fear that they will be started on the road to delinquency.
6. You can't wrap diamonds in a TV set.—AMERICAN PRESS.

Responsibility for Peace Lies With U. S. Senator Martin Tells Colonial Daughters

United States Senator Edward Martin addressing the Pennsylvania Chapter, Colonial Daughters of the 17th Century, in Washington, D. C., a few days ago, declared:

"The early settlers of the American Colonies differed in their form of worship and their ideals of government. But they had one firm belief on which they could all agree—that freedom of the individual is God's greatest gift to mankind—more precious than life itself.

"The development of the United States, from an uncharted, savage wilderness, to the greatest Nation in all history, was founded upon that priceless element of our National strength—freedom of the individual.

"Freedom of the individual, sustained by faith in God, made possible our marvelous industrial development, our great transportation systems and our rich agricultural production."

Continuing Senator Martin said: "The course of history has placed upon the American people the responsibility for peace and progress in the world.

"The United States stands as the one strong barrier against the Communist conspiracy to dominate and enslave the entire world.

"The jet-propelled plane, the atomic weapons and the hydrogen bomb have changed the whole picture of offensive and defensive war.

"We know, however, that enduring peace cannot be achieved by force alone. It can be realized through truth, honor, justice and devotion to high moral and spiritual standards.

McCann Sponsors Irrigation Bill For Farm

—Harrisburg—

The expected increase in irrigation on Pennsylvania farms during the next few years is seen by many farm observers as the reason for introduction of a new well drillers' licensing bill.

The new measure sets up requirements and fees for licensed well drillers, but also includes a provision calling for well drillers to supply detailed information on wells they complete.

Under the measure, introduced by Representative Stephen McCann, Democrat, Greene, drillers would have 40 days after completing a well in which to file a report detailing location, size and depth, materials passed through and other information pertaining to the construction or operation of a well.

More and more Pennsylvania farmers, especially those producing vegetables, potatoes and orchard crops, are turning to irrigation to supplement regular rain supplies.

A measure to remove a bottleneck from one of the state's most important chicken disease control programs comes up for debate in the House this week.

The proposal, backed by the State Poultry Federation and numerous other farm organizations, would allow lay technicians to take initial steps in the commonwealth's extensive pullorum testing plan.

At present the initial step in the program—drawing of blood from each chicken under examination—must be made by veterinarians. This requirement, most farm observers contend, has slowed down the pullorum testing program because of a shortage of veterinarians.

Millions of birds are tested annually in Pennsylvania under the program.

The disease—traveling under the weighty title solmanella pullorum—is an egg-born sickness attacking baby chicks. It is a particular threat in the huge hatcheries turning out thousands of chicks a week. One infected bird could wipe out a whole hatch potentially. There is no vaccine to prevent the disease. Infected birds must be destroyed.

The bill up for debate was sponsored by Representatives E. J. Farabaugh, Democrat, Cambria; John H. Light, Republican, Lebanon, and Herman E. Stebbins, Democrat, York, all farmers, and Albert W. Johnson, Republican, McKean, an attorney.

Specifically, the bill provides that the agriculture secretary may license lay technicians to draw blood from birds to be used in pullorum testing programs.

State Guard First In U. S. Turnout

Brigadier General Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, new state adjutant general, Thursday praised the state's "on their toes" National Guard for a "very satisfactory" performance in the first nationwide mobilization test.

Pennsylvania units taking part in the exercise were first in the nation to report "alert and ready," only 46 minutes after the Pentagon signaled the start of the surprise drill. Biddle said: "We can be awfully proud of the Guard in the state. They are really on their toes."

The Pentagon called the alert at 6:30 Wednesday night, April 20, for states in the Eastern time zone. Other time zones were alerted at staggered intervals.

In announcing the alert, the National Guard Bureau at the Pentagon asked all Guardsmen to speed to their duty posts. The whole operation was designed to find out how many Guardsmen would answer the call.

At Harrisburg Airport Major Paul Rosenberg, wing adjutant, said reports showed that 95 per cent of 1,925 men reported for duty in the Harrisburg, Pittsburgh and Reading areas before the end of the four-hour drill.

Subsequently to Wetzel's escape, Harman moved his headquarters to Fort Washington, where Cincinnati now stands. One of his first official acts at that post was to offer a reward for the apprehension and delivery at that garrison of Lewis Wetzel. On his way down he landed at Point Pleasant, and although a detachment of Harman's command was there, he roamed at leisure about the town for several days. Lieutenant Kingsbury, ignorant of Wetzel's presence in that region, while scouting about the place met him by accident. Wetzel saw Kingsbury first and halted in the path with great firmness, prepared for any emergency, but leaving the Lieutenant to decide upon his own course. Kingsbury, a brave man himself, did not wish any injury to so daring a spirit, and eyeing him with a significant glance he said: "Get out of my sight, you old Indian killer." Wetzel, quick to perceive the intent, warily withdrew, as willing to avoid unnecessary danger as he was to court it when the emergency justified. Taking again to his canoe, he wended his way to Limestone, Kentucky, where he piled his adventurous vocation. When he had no engagements with the Indians or hunting parties, he amused himself at shooting, footracing and wrestling with the other hunters. He was reported to be personally popular, as much on account of his agreeable social qualities as of those wonderful traits for which he is so justly celebrated.

While sitting in a tavern at Maysville, during a period of leisure, Lieutenant Lawler landed a boat full of soldiers, and finding Wetzel there re-arrested him, dragged him to the boat and delivered him that same night to Harman at Cincinnati, who again put him in irons to await trial and conviction for an offense which he readily admitted having committed—that of killing a "noble red man."

Though Harman only intended to perform his duty as a soldier, he was wanting in that common sense which distinguished between the stern letter of the law and that line of policy wherein "prudence is the better part of valor." When it became noised about that Wetzel was again in "durance vile," liable to suffer the extreme penalty of death on the gallows, having only killed an Indian—which was accounted a virtue rather than offense by the settlers—a degree of resentment and indignation was evoked which threatened an organized uprising to release him by force. The state of affairs produced such an impression on the mind of Judge Symmes that he was induced to release him upon a writ of habeas corpus, the requisite bail for his good behavior being promptly furnished. Upon his discharge he was escorted with great pomp and triumph to Columbia, where a great convivial feast was prepared in honor of the event.

This is said to have occurred on the 26th of August, 1789. Judge Foster described him at that period as a man twenty-six years old, five feet ten, full-breasted, very broad shouldered, long arms, dark skinned, black eyes, face pitted deep with small-pox, and hair, of which he was very careful, when combed reached to the calves of his legs. In mixed company he was taciturn, but the life of the social party of familiar spirits. His morals were quite exemplary according to the measures of the morals of his day.

Shortly after these scenes transpired he revisited his native hills in West Virginia, accepted an invitation to accompany a young friend and relative to his secluded home on the waters of Dunkard Creek; and now occurred the thrilling incident which forms the basis of the popular fiction "Conrad Maer." These two young men wended their way leisurely along, hunting and sporting as they went. Upon reaching the young man's home what a spectacle met their view. The paternal roof was a heap of smouldering ashes, and all around was a scene of desolation, such as only a band of marauding savages could produce. Wetzel was himself again, the sphere of the work now to be done was his native element. He lost no time in examining the trail. It was made by three Indians, one renegade white, and a captive girl which proved to be the betrothed of the young man at his side, whose anxiety and ardor to pursue would listen to no restraint. The two strode rapidly on, and finding the Indians had taken great precaution to conceal their tracks, they pursued with little regard to the exact trail, for the keen discernment of Wetzel led him to conclude that they would endeavor to reach the Ohio River by the shortest and most practical route, and he pushed on hoping to head them off at their crossing place. They scarcely halted, except to take a little refreshment, till near midnight, when a brewing storm rendered it too dark to proceed. Early in the morning the two resumed the exciting chase. Striking the trail again in a secluded dell, they discovered fresh and more convincing evidence that the captive was the young man's affianced bride. With renewed energy they bent their way. Striking the river just after dark, they discovered to their dismay the camp-fires of the enemy on the opposite shore just below the mouth of Captina Creek.

Having swam the river and reconnoitered the camp, and discovered the captive, the young man became almost uncontrollably frantic for immediate attack; but the more prudent counsel of Wetzel prevailed, and they patiently awaited dawning of day. At length "auspicious morn" broke in and the savages were up bright and early making preparations to depart. Now was time to strike. Simultaneously Wetzel picked off the largest Indian, and the young man the renegade. The lover made haste to release his sweetheart while Wetzel pursued the other two Indians who had taken to the woods to ascertain the attacking force. He followed them but a short distance when he fired at random to draw them from concealment. The trick succeeded. With uplifted tomahawk they dashed after him, uttering their terrible war whoop; but the adroit hunter soon had his piece reloaded, and wheeling quickly around shot the foremost Indian through the heart. The remaining savage, now fully assured that his gun was empty, rushed impetuously after him, but Wetzel by jumping from tree to tree succeeded in thwarting his adversary till another load was in his gun, when discharging it, this savage also lay dead at his feet. This incident though smacking somewhat of the sensational is not out of character with others known to be authentic and is set down by the author of "Our Western Border" as an established fact.

Philadelphia Orchestra Concert May 3

EUGENE ORMANDY

The Philadelphia Orchestra will give its first concert in Pittsburgh since 1950 in Syria Mosque on Tuesday night, May 3. It is being presented by the Pittsburgh Symphony Society to strengthen the bonds between the two great symphony orchestras of Pennsylvania, and in doing so to give people the opportunity to hear the orchestra which a poll of 200 critics has for the second consecutive year voted the leading major symphony orchestra in the United States.

The director for the past 17 years, Eugene Ormandy, who has proved that he knew the most direct road to the pinnacle of his profession, will conduct. The Ormandy career has been coupled with ceaseless work and insatiable striving for perfection. From birth in Budapest, November 18, 1899, he was destined to become a musician, and was hardly more than five when he entered the Royal Academy of Music in Budapest—the youngest student ever to be admitted. He made a number of public appearances as a violinist, including one before Emperor Francis Josef, and at 15 received his professor's diploma in piano playing, composing and counterpoint.

Ormandy came to the United States in 1921, and likes to say that he was born in New York City at the age of 22! When plans for a tour fell through, the young artist, alone in a strange country without funds, took a job in the orchestra of the Capitol Theater, New York's leading motion picture theater. He soon became concertmaster, and one of radio's important conductors.

In 1931, Toscanini, scheduled for a concert as guest conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, became ill. Ormandy was invited as his replacement. Although his manager advised against substituting for Toscanini, and following Stokowski, Ormandy chose the gamble with such success that he was selected to become the permanent conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra as the result of that concert. He returned to Philadelphia as music director and conductor five years later. Today, he is recognized throughout the world as one of the great conductors of our time.

The program to be played in Pittsburgh on May 3, holds delight for every listener, and is further enticing as the identical program with which this matchless orchestra will open the "Salute to France" Festival in Paris on May 19. It will open with the Symphony No. 5 of America's Howard Hanson who has named this work, "Sinfonia Sacra" denoting music of a genuine, simple creed, and convincing steadfast belief. Its performance by the Philadelphia Orchestra in New York in February brought forth an ovation for the composer. Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" follows to give the first part of the evening's program a sweep of sound-color such as can be looked for from the instruments and players of perhaps only the Philadelphians' orchestra.

Armenian Dances by Yrdumian will be heard after the intermission and before the closing number, one of the symphonic literature's most brilliant masterworks, La Mer by Debussy. This work, in the performance of this orchestra of magnificent sound and ensemble, is truly a mysterious incarnation of the spirit of the sea. If there is any particular showpiece for what has been called by many, "The world's greatest orchestra," La Mer by Debussy might well be it.

Tickets ranging in price from $1.25 to $4.50 are now on sale at the Symphony Booth in Kaufmann's and at the personal service counters at Gimbels and Horne's. Mail orders are being accepted at 1305 Farmers Bank Building, Pittsburgh, 22. Please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope for return of the tickets. If preferred, telephone reservations may be made by calling Court 1-5853 in Pittsburgh.

UN Control of Seas, Antarctic Urged

—London—
Sir Winston Churchill's government has been asked to back United Nations ownership of the Antarctic and of the world's high seas.

The request came March 29 from a nine-member delegation representing the British parliamentary group for a world federal government. The delegation was composed of philosopher Bertrand Russell and eight members of Parliament who represented 103 MPs of all three British parties.

Minister of State Anthony Nutting received the delegation at the British Foreign Office. Later, the delegation issued a statement on its talks with Mr. Nutting.

The group urged that the United Nations Charter, due for revision soon, should change the world organization in the direction of a world government with limited powers sufficient to preserve peace.

It declared the United Nations should carefully designate territorial waters of all the nations and take over the remaining high seas. This it said would prevent nations from making "more and more exorbitant claims to territorial waters."

On the Antarctic, it said rival claims made a permanent solution necessary. It noted the United States put forward a plan in 1948 to place the Antarctic under the United Nations.

"Village Smithy" Is True Scot

If the village blacksmith in Olney, Maryland, resembles the Scotsman on the Savings Bond poster above, it's more than just a coincidence. They're one and the same. When Artist Gih Crockett selected the thrift theme for his Savings Bond poster, he chose as his model 70-year-old Samuel Josiah Finneyfrock, a true Scotsman who piles his trade in the little Maryland town just 18 miles north of the White House. A blacksmith who hasn't shod a horse in 16 years, Mr. Finneyfrock nevertheless keeps busy at his forge making chimney initials and other ornaments for homeowners, repairing machinery, and otherwise serving as handyman for the neighborhood. One of the few old-time "village smithies" left in the United States, he observes: "No, I don't have a spreading chestnut tree to work under. A blight killed them all around here 40 years ago." Mr. Finneyfrock not only has contributed his smiling countenance to the nation-wide promotion of Savings Bonds, but he also is a regular purchaser of what he calls his "good, safe investment." The poster is now being widely displayed all over the country.

Yorkshire Longhorn Cattle Introduced Into Pennsylvania by Colonel Cresap

Henry W. Shoemaker, Pennsylvania Folklorist, said the famous Yorkshire Longhorn cattle were introduced into Pennsylvania by Colonel Thomas Cresap, Lord Baltimore's famous fighting agent.

"This fact," Shoemaker said, "has led many people to believe that Cresap was a Yorkshireman despite the fact that he was a Roman Catholic when he migrated to Pennsylvania.

"Cresap had a varied religious life. In York County he was a Roman Catholic. In Lancaster County he was converted, along with his wife and nine children, to Lutheranism by the Rev. John Casper Stoeber. In Western Maryland, where he later migrated, the family became Episcopallians.

"However, the famous Yorkshire cattle were really not natives of Yorkshire, but were of Spanish origin like the equally famous Texas Longhorns. The legend of the origin of the Yorkshire cattle is that when the La-Jolla, the quartermaster's ship of the great Spanish Armada, was wrecked in 1587 on the Yorkshire coast, some Spanish cattle, which had been housed in crates on the ship's deck, were rescued by Yorkshire farmers. These cattle are said to have been longhorns which had been 'dehorned' before being placed in the crates.

"At any rate when the first calves of the Spanish cattle were born in Yorkshire the bulls soon developed horns of great length. As proof of their Spanish origin the Yorkshire farmers would allow no dehorning and soon a magnificent breed of English 'longhorns' developed. This breed was already 200 years old in Yorkshire when Colonel Cresap moved across the Atlantic in the eighteenth century to York County and later to Lancaster County. After establishing a homestead in Lancaster County, Colonel Cresap sent to his alleged birthplace, Shipton, for a shipment of Yorkshire longhorns.

"Like their ancestors, they too were dehorned before being shipped to Pennsylvania. But a year after their arrival their offspring developed the mark of their breed—horns of enormous length.

and Mrs. Clarence Stockdale and children of Painesville, Ohio; Mrs. Eva Carpenter of Pine Bank; Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Taylor and son, Franklin of Clarksburg, W. Va.

The Ogden family of Singers of Pittsburgh were at the Jollytown Methodist Church, Friday night. They will be at the Garrison Methodist Church June 10.

Robert Lemmon spent the week end in the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Lemmon.

Mrs. Mary Lemley of Spraggs, is spending this week in the home of her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Leo Wise.

spring developed the mark of their breed—horns of enormous length.

"It is not known whether Colonel Cresap took his famous cattle with him when he migrated to western Maryland. There is no record of the breed in that part of the country.

"For almost a hundred years after their arrival this Yorkshire breed of longhorns was prevalent in Lancaster County where they were known, not by their right name, but rather as 'Cresap's Cattle'."

"Business Connections"

"That a judge should avoid giving ground for any reasonable suspicion that he is utilizing the power or prestige of his office to persuade or coerce others to patronize or contribute to the success of private business."

"He should, therefore, not enter into such private business or pursue such a course of conduct, as would justify such suspicion, nor use the power of his office to promote any business interest of others. He should not enter into any business relation which, in the normal course of events, might be reasonably expected to bring his personal interest into conflict with the impartial performance of his official duties."

"A Judge should abstain from making personal investments in enterprises which are apt to be involved in litigation in the Court; and, after his accession to the Bench, he should not retain such investments previously made, longer than a period sufficient to enable him to dispose of them without serious loss."

It follows, then, that you could well support a candidate who will observe particularly, the above quoted rules and, generally, all the American Bar Association rules.

Fifty-Year History of Greene County Sports

By GEORGE N. THOMAS

RIFLE TEAMS

Rifle teams as a rule never have been publicity hounds, and they have philosophically accepted the minor sport roll on sports pages.
And through the decades they have defied statistics, that is, they have not increased in number with the surge of population.

But riflemen and rifewomen (a definite increase in these, in the past generation) perhaps are the most faithful and ardent students of any game.
Within their ranks gunfolks have the same type personalities as in other sports, and there's descriptive jargon for them.

A veteran who, when asked what score he made, tells the number of times he missed—such as "I missed one out of ten"—is a "shooter."
On the other hand, a rookie or braggart or unskilled rifeman, who says, "I hit nine out of 10," is a "plinker."

Shooters aim to be perfect, and they mean just that.
Ordinarily, they shoot 100 times at a target, and if they miss once, they have "dropped a point."

A bullseye counts ten, and often many shooters score the same number of bullseyes.
As a tiebreaker, there's an "x" inside the black bullseye. Number of direct hits on the "x" determine the best of two or more excellent shooters.

Before any teams were organized and clubs were chartered in the county, groups of friends met and shot for cash awards once a week.

Such events could be found in Bluff, Pine Bank, Waynesburg and other communities.
In Morrisville, just outside Waynesburg, the shotgun was the chief weapon for participants who actually were game shooters at practice. They didn't seek prizes, rather worked to improve their accuracy.

Shortly after World War I the Isaac Walton Club county chapter broke up and the Waynesburg Gun Club was organized.
Walter C. Montgomery became president; Frank L. Hoover, secretary; Byron B. Dally, treasurer; Charley Strosnider, shotgun field captain; William Bennett, smooth bore rifle captain, and Wesley Henderson, high power rifle captain.

They sought an indoor range for winter use and decided upon the basement of the Blair Hotel on High street.
That was all right for sound-sleeping and hard-hearing tenants, but a group of irate and frightened citizens who were unsympathetic toward shooters complained loudly and bitterly, particularly when Bob Wilson fired his German Luger.

In as diplomatic terms as possible, the management asked the gun club to move its site and they migrated to Morrisville where more open spaces were conducive to noise and safety.
Somehow, word reached Pittsburgh about the Waynesburg club and the "city slickers" invited the "Greene County Hillbillies" to the city for a shoot.

The city marksmen turned out with their shiny rods and the fanciest of sights. The country boys arrived with beatup guns, wire not only holding some parts together but also acting as sights.
But the "hillbillies" figuratively shot the city boys into the ground and they weren't invited back.

In the late 1920s, there was an attempt to reactivate the Isaac Walton League and within it encompass the gun club.
To raise money for reorganization, the league staged an all-day shoot in Morrisville and Roy Taylor and William Cole emerged the day's best shooters.

In 1931, Cole, along with Earl Tustin, Hagan Cole, T. J. White and Harvey Cole, often described as dyed-in-the-wool shooters, were about the best around the district as they challenged and defeated teams from Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

The next year, Cole, Roy Taylor, Bill Taylor, White and Dewey Taylor extended the team's widespread fame to Ohio.
The group that shot for the Waynesburg club in the early thirties was such a set of sharpshooters that they lost only once in three years.

Cole is said to have been the best all-around shot the club ever had and ever hopes to have.
He has been designated among the all-time great shooters by everyone who knows the sport and no one in the first half century has disputed his ability.

Harvey came from a family of great shooters whose homesteads were around Bluff and Kughntown and they could pop bullseyes whether it were targets or turkey and bird shoots.
It was part of the family's great American heritage of which it was extremely proud.

Haney Refuses to Alibi for Pirates; Claims Team Has Beaten Itself

Manager Fred Haney said Monday he hasn't an alibi in the world over the dismal play of his cellar-dwelling National League Pittsburgh Pirates.

"We've beaten ourselves," Haney told the season's first Grandstand Managers luncheon. "That's been the story. I'm not discouraged with the club despite our eight losses in nine games. "Our morale and spirit never have been higher. Actually we've lost three ball games, possibly four. The others we kicked away. We haven't an alibi in the world. "We played good ball in spring training but began to tighten up just a few days before the season opened. You can blame it on youth, over anxiety and inexperience.

"But I'm not discouraged with this ball club. The daylight outshines the cloud. Our time will come and when it comes we're going to surprise a lot of fans. "Our pitching has been adequate. Bob Purkey, Max Surkont and Nelson King have pitched fine ball. But little things multiply. We hope to correct them. The boys are not discouraged and neither am I."

Haney, celebrating his 57th birthday anniversary, said the chief reason for the poor showing of his club has been the lack of hitting. "You can't win ball games without hits," he said. Two of Haney's big guns—outfielder Frank Thomas, and third baseman Sid Gordon—show a combined batting average of .285 and a total of two runs driven in—one apiece. Thomas is hitting .118, Gordon .167.

Thomas, the Pirates' leading home run hitter last season, has only four hits in 34 trips to the plate. Gordon, the oldest and the highest paid player, has got five hits in 30 appearances. "We've got to get some hitting before we can start in winning," continued Haney. "The last 10 days we haven't had hardly any batting practice at all. Last week we did not have a complete round before any game. "There's going to be mistakes. Mistakes will be made in winning. We've got the makings of the finest ball club in five years. But we're going to have to learn to relax."

MEMORY LANE
Country Store Aroma
Remember how the old country store had an aroma all its own? It was a blending of boots, bolts of calico, cheese, coffee, pickles, molasses, apples, kerosene, tobacco, and a dozen other odors mingled together with a dash of dust which kept rolling in from passing buggies and wagons. Remember?
We endeavor to make the final tribute express the love and esteem in which the departed was held by family and friends.

How to Waste Time

We Americans are people who don't like to waste time. We pride ourselves on speedy work, and we don't even slow down completely on vacations: "That's a good place for a rest," we tell each other, "Something doing every minute." Of course, we Americans are also noted for heart trouble. The tick of the clock takes first place over the beat of the heart, and too often these days, much too often, the clock wins. Think this over a minute. Then, if you will, suppose sometime this week you deliberately waste a little time. Drive out into the country until you find a church that sets in off the road. Perhaps it stands in a grove of maples or elms,

My meditation of Him shall be sweet: I will be glad in the Lord. Ps. 103:34.

or on some windswept hill. Its location doesn't matter, for God's spirit dwells in them all. Stop at this church. Just a few minutes. That's all. You can feel tension drop away. For here is an abiding peace—the wind is sweet; the sounds of the countryside soft; and the view satisfying to the soul. Just a little church on a piece of God's green earth. Wasting time? Perhaps you may think so. But you are trading only a few moments for the opportunity of meditating with God as He opens the vista of eternity before your eyes. Without the church doors as within them, any man may commune with his Maker.

All Church Notices must be in The Republican Office not later than 12 o'clock noon, Wednesdays of each week to insure publication.
