61 Million Held Jobs in 1954

—Washington—
An average of 61,200,000 Americans had jobs in 1954, about a million less than the average in the boom year 1953, the Census Bureau said this week.

Employment averaged 3,200,000 last year, some five per cent of the labor and was about double the postwar low average of 1953. Unemployment reached a peak of 3,700,000 in 1954 during February and March, receding thereafter. This was about 21 per cent under the postwar high of 4,700,000 recorded in 1950.

This year has shown an improvement over 1954 figures. A report by the Labor and Commerce Department said employment totaled 61,685,000 early last month.

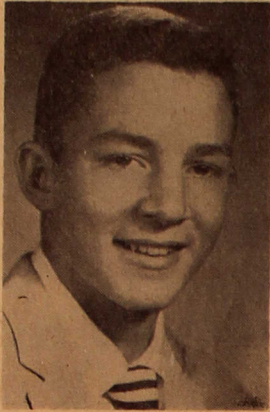

This was an increase of 1,208,000 over early March, the largest March-to-April increase on record. Unemployment in early April was estimated at 2,962,000.

THIS OLE CAR

This ole car once knew some children,
This ole car once knew a wife,
This ole car once knew a husband
And a merry family life . . .

But this family's trips are over,
Picked a dang'rous spot to pass—
Then they saw death's angel peekin'
Through the broken windshield glass.

Ain't gonna need this car no longer,
Ain't gonna need this car no more—
Had no time to fix the brakes up,
Had no time to fix the door,
Had no time to fix the steerin'
Or to drive with more restraint—
Ain't gonna need this car no longer,
They've been taken to meet the Saint . . .

No. 1 Polio Shot Retains Potency

No need to worry at all about paralytic polio shot No. 1 losing its potency waiting for shot No. 2.

In fact, the longer the wait, the better the results in terms of polio-fighting immunity.

That's the word direct from Dr. Jonas E. Salk, who led his team of University of Pittsburgh researchers to the discovery of the paralytic polio vaccine.

Dr. Salk had originally recommended a two-to-four week spacing between the first and second shots, with an eye on the on-coming polio season this summer.

But if anything, the effect becomes better if the waiting period is longer, said Dr. Salk.

Ex-Waynesburger Retired in Texas

He has been an accountant for 52 years.

His wife was the former Georgia Hunt of Waynesburg, and they have three sons, all located in Texas.

Pennsylvania Economy League has made the following analysis of Greene County's 1955 budget:

The 1954 operation of the county ended with a cash surplus of $73,711, which was $54,039 more than anticipated. The estimated receipts for 1954 were $463,616. The actual county receipts amounted to $463,744. The 1954 expenditure appropriations were $571,182. The county held the actual expense to $517,271.

Increase of actual surplus over the estimated budget surplus at the end of the year was the result of two major items. First, the county had set up $26,000 for repairs to the county office building and used only $4,300 of this amount. Second, the budget called for $95,500 to be spent on capital improvements. Since the appraisal firm did not complete their contract in 1954, only $61,000 of this item was expended.

Actual revenue receipts were $4,400 more than estimated in the budget. The increase is reflected in two items in the institution district fund and a reduction of real estate valuation. The loss in real estate valuation is caused by the failure of new construction to make up for the decline in coal valuation due to depletion of coal resources.

Other operating revenues remained rather stable.

A reduction of $16,000 is expected in the total operating expenditures during 1955. The $5,000 in general administration and $10,000 in general government judicial, with the balance expected in correctional costs.

An item of $18,000 for repairs to the county office building was inserted in the 1955 budget to cover the costs of a new roof, down spouts and masonry repairs.

The costs of the tax assessment department was reduced $54,000 due to the expected completion of the mapping and reassessment program by mid-summer. This work was being done under Act 594 of 1951, which required the counties to install a permanent records system for assessments by 1957.

There appears under miscellaneous capital outlay, an item of $50,000. This item is for Civilian Defense and covers the purchase of a two-way radio communication system. The central control station is to be in Waynesburg with hook-ups to each of the 14 fire companies. Every fire truck will be equipped with two-way radios. The county's share of the expense will amount to $12,500. The federal government will contribute $25,000 and the townships and boroughs in which the fire companies are located will contribute the additional $12,500. These two items are reflected in the receipts under non-revenue receipts.

The institution district fund presents the same picture as the general fund. As in the past few years, the expenses are expected to exceed revenue. This year the deficit is expected to be $12,500. This deficit will be taken up by cash surplus.

January 1952, the cash surplus of the institution district fund amounted to $81,825. At the end of 1955 the cash surplus will be approximately $6,919.

Increased costs of care for county home inmates and children are largely responsible for the annual increasing costs of operating the institution district.

In order to aid the district this year, it was necessary to allocate an additional ½ mill of tax revenue to the institution district. Even with the additional tax revenue, the district has to dip into its cash reserves to the extent of about $12,500 in order to balance its budget. If costs continue to rise during the next few years, the district will have to consider increasing its revenues.

A cost analysis of the institution district may provide some assistance. The county charges $60.00 per month for the care of persons who are financially able to pay for their care. The question arises as to the cost of maintenance and of the $60.00 really covers the actual cost to the county.

In addition to the funds previously discussed, the county maintains a liquid fuels fund. Revenues deposited to this fund are received from the Commonwealth and represent ½ cent per gallon allocated to counties from the gasoline tax. This money can only be spent for roads and bridges.

The county has instituted a plan to make major improvements on at least one bridge per year out of this fund, while maintaining the many other bridges in the county. Therefore, contributions to townships and boroughs for road repair continue to be relatively low.

The Pioneer History of Greene County, Penna.

By L. K. EVANS

So far as I know Ryerson Station is not distinguished by any tragic scene of blood and carnage. But it was on the highway the Indians frequently trod to and from their deeds of rapine and death. Hence it was deemed an important strategic point, and at an early day in the history of the country the Colonial government of Virginia then claiming the territory and exercised jurisdiction over it, authorized the construction of a fort there for the safety and convenience of scouts, who were the signal corps and the military telegraphs at that day. As we have already seen Captain James Seals at a later period rendezvoused there with a company of rangers, among whom were the grandfather, father and uncles of Isaac Teagarden and Thomas Lazear, the father of Honorable Jesse Lazear.

About the year 1790, a family by name of Davis resided on the north branch of Wheeling Creek, about three miles above Ryerson Station, and a short distance below where Stall's or Kincaid's mill now is. The family, with the exception of one fortunate lad, who had been sent out to drive up the horses, were seated around the breakfast table partaking of a humble but substantial repast. Suddenly a party of warrior savages appeared at the cabin door. The old man and his two sons sprang up as by instinct to reach for their guns which hung on their convenient pegs on the cabin wall; but the design was detected by the Indians who instantly shot the three dead on the spot. After scalping the victims, dispatching the breakfast and pillaging the premises, they made captive the mother and only daughter, and departed on their way up the creek. The boy in search of the horses managed to elude them and escaped unharmed.

It appears that they captured a horse. One of the Indians mounted it, and taking the girl before him and the woman behind him, was traveling gaily along. However, they had not proceeded far when a shot from the rifle of John Henderson, who lay concealed in an adjoining thicket, knocked the jolly savage off. But whether the wound was fatal or not Henderson did not remain to find out. He had to provide himself safety from the party of the infuriated savages.

Some months later the putrid remains of the daughter were discovered in the woods just over the dividing ridge separating the waters of Wheeling from those of Dunkard Creeks. But what became of the mother remains to this day shrouded in mystery, as she was never afterward heard from.

The victims of this bloody massacre were buried on the site of their death. I believe the graves are distinguishable to this day. I am also informed that the skeleton remains of an Indian were exposed some years ago, in that neighborhood, by the banks of the stream being washed away.

Four miles below Ryerson Station is Crow's Mill, which was the scene of many thrilling incidents, as seen from sketches devoted to that special settlement.

There is a tradition that one Robert Carroll, his wife and two small children, and his two brothers, John and Hamilton, lived on a branch of Wheeling Creek in the border of what is now Washington County, and not far from the Beulah Baptist Church. One night while Robert was absent from home an alarm of savages reached his family. Preparations were made to start early next morning to seek safety in Lindley's Fort. At earliest dawn the two brothers went out to gather some dry fuel with which to cook a hasty breakfast, when they were both shot dead by ambushed Indians. The mother with a two-year-old child in her arms and one four years old by the hand, glided unobserved into a field of maturing corn near by. When Indians approached the cabin a slut which had a litter of pups under one of the beds, disputed their entrance with such ferocity that she had to be dispatched before they could get in. This gave the fugitive mother and children time to get out of hearing. The marauders scalped the brothers, pillaged the house, even to emptying the feather beds, and made off with their plunder. But Mrs. Carroll with her two children made good her escape by fleeing about ten miles to Lindley's Fort, where a few days subsequently she gave birth to another child.

There is another tradition, that on Crabapple Run, in Richhill Township, there lived in the troublous days, on lands now owned by David G. Braddock, a family by name of Hame. This family consisted of father, mother and five or six children. The murderous savages came one day, and without a moment's warning massacred in cold blood the entire family, a deed of horror that could not be surpassed, and yet oblivion has almost shrouded all the facts from the knowledge of the race.

In this same general neighborhood, though within the present boundaries of Washington County, at various times Indians slaughtered a family by name of McIntyre, a family by name of Beeham, a family by name of Link, a family by name of McIntosh, a Mrs. Nancy Ross, and tomahawked and scalped two Beekman boys, and committed many other depredations, the traditions of all of which have become so dim by the erasures of time that I have been unable to elicit sufficient particulars to justify an attempt at relating them.—L. ## Reconciliation of John Penn and Wife Related by State Folklore President

—Harrisburg—

Henry W. Shoemaker, Pennsylvania Folklorist, told the tale of the reconciliation of John Penn and his estranged wife.

"Travelers passing Fisher's Ferry, below Sunbury, invariably notice a stone ferry house, of antique design, which stands to the left of the railway station, and close to the bank of the Susquehanna," he said.

"It is the old Peter Fisher home, once a tavern and stopping place for persons traveling between the West Branch Valley and the hard coal regions, via the post road on Hollinger's Run, over Broad Mountain. There are many legends clustered about the quaint old mansion.

"One of these traditions is that it was the scene of a reunion between John Penn (1729-1795), Governor of Pennsylvania from 1763 to the time of the Revolutionary War, and the wife of his youth, Maria Cox, daughter of William Cox, a London silversmith, from whom he had been separated for many years.

"This is the legend: "John Penn, then 19 years old, met Maria Cox, 17. They were married at Gretna Greene, and the family, much upset, sent him to the Continent.

"He, however, effected a reunion with his young wife, brought her to this country, and placed her at the home of a friend, Peter Allen, near Harrisburg. She taught a village school. He went to Philadelphia and upon returning was informed she had left with a German Servant Boy.

"Years later he made a trip up the Susquehanna to Fort Augusta on the site of Sunbury, and stopped at the old stone house at Fisher's Ferry, then a tavern.

"In the kitchen, seated by the inglenook, he heard someone's incessant coughing in an inner room.

"He asked the landlord, Peter Fisher, who it was who was ill. Why, your worship, replied Fisher, 'It's an Englishwoman dying,' for in those days peoples' nationalities were more pronounced, and any English speaking persons was always called an 'Englishwoman,' or 'Englishman,' as the case might be.

"It's a strange story,' faltered old Fisher. 'They tell it, your excellence, though it is doubtless a lie, that you sir, loved this Englishwoman, and your political enemies had her kidnapped by two Indians and taken to Canada. The Indians were paid for keeping her there until a few years ago when their remittances were suddenly stopped, and they came home. One, Joshua, it was said was murdered soon after. Arvas, the other, was accused of the crime, but he stopped here for a night a few weeks afterwards and swore to me he was guiltless. The Englishwoman got away and walked all the way back from a place called Muskoka, a thousand miles, but she took a cold and got a quick consumption on the way and is on her deathbed now. I knew her in all her youth and beauty at Peter Allen's, when she was always the Belle of the dances there; they said she had been brought up a Quaker; but my, how she could dance! You would not know her now.'

"I want to see her,' said the Governor rising to his feet. It was getting dark, and Fisher lit a rush-light and led the way. He opened the heavy paneled walnut door without rapping. His wife and daughter and several strangers sat on high-backed rush bottomed chairs on either side of the big four-poster bed which had come from Germany. On the bed lay a woman about 40 years of age, frightfully emaciated by suffering, whose exaggerated clearcut features accentuated in their marble outlines the pallor of oncoming dissolution. Her wavy, dark hair was parted and hung over her dark eyes. 'Mary, Mary,' said the Governor as he ran to her side, seizing the ivory-white hands which lay on the flowered coverlet. 'John, my darling John,' said the dying woman feebly. 'Leave us alone together,' commanded the Governor.

"The nursing women looked at one another as they retired. The thoughts which their glances carried indicated 'well, after all, the story's true.' They had not been alone for 10 minutes when Penn ran out of the door calling, 'Come quick, someone; I fear she's going.' The household assembled, but in another 10 minutes, 'Mary Warren,' alias Marie Cox-Penn had died.

"A strange fate had reunited the influential friend of Peter Allen, master of 'Tulliallan,' to Maria Cox-Penn, pronounced legally dead after an absence of over 20 years in parts unknown."

State C of C Blasts At Leader Tax

—Harrisburg—

The State Chamber of Commerce has pointed a finger at a "highly controversial feature" of Governor Leader's wage and income tax—the ability to pay.

The weak point in the Governor's argument that his proposed income tax is based on an ability to pay, the chamber declared, is the assumption persons receiving unearned income should pay higher rates than those earning salaries.

Leader's income tax would assess wages and salaries at one per cent; income of farmers, physicians and lawyers at two per cent; dividends, rents, royalties and capitals gains at three, five and six per cent.

The chamber declared: "Many Pennsylvania companies have encouraged their employees to buy company stock. Westinghouse Electric Corporation, for instance, is issuing this month the millionth share of stock purchased under a payroll deduction plan.

"Will the Westinghouse employe with $49 of wages in his billfold and $1 in dividends consider himself a fair mark for the upper-bracket tax the administration wants to levy on his dividends?"

"In America's classless society a dividend dollar buys no more, no less than a wage dollar."

Postal Raise Goes to Ike, May be Vetoed

—Washington—

Congress Wednesday sent to President Eisenhower a bill raising the pay of 500,000 postal workers by an average of 5.8 per cent. There are indications he may veto it.

Senate approval completed congressional action on the measure, a compromise of differing bills passed by the Senate and House earlier.

The Senate vote was 66-11. The House passed it Monday 328-66.

Eisenhower said at a news conference last week he would study the postal pay measure carefully when it comes to his desk. Nevertheless, Republican congressional leaders have said they understood the White House never would go above a 7.6 per cent pay hike.

Postmaster General Summerfield has said he would urge the President to veto the 8.8 per cent bill.

Originally, the President told Congress this year he favored a 6.5 per cent increase for postal workers. But later the White House gave an informal assent to a 7.6 per cent raise.

However, the Senate passed a 10 per cent bill and the House an 8.3 per cent measure.

The compromise would give each postal worker at least a seven per cent raise. Some would get much more through reclassification to higher pay brackets.

Vote For
W. BERTRAM WAYCHOFF
For
JUDGE OF COURT OF COMMON PLEAS

Political Comment

No election in many years, other than the Leader upset of last year, has been as quiet concerning the highest office in this county.

Now is the time to think about:

1. The term of 10 years being enough for one man.
2. The fact that experience alone is not the only qualification.
3. That a change should be made.
4. That the problems daily confronting a District Attorney can as well be resolved, when both sides of a case are presented to him at the same time.
5. That the Domestic Relations Division of our Court, as authorized by law two years ago, should now be put into operation for the first time.
6. That the fifty unsettled family cases and half of 400 uncollected non-support orders should be processed through use of the Uniform Support Act, which has not been used although a law since 1951.
7. That a vigorous and vigilant attitude must be present to secure to the people of Greene County the progress in manner of living and betterment to which they are entitled.

Do not permit the slated candidates through their un-Democratic endorsement, through the mis-use of patronage, through influence, or through money to win this election, but register your protest of such action by voting against the slate.

Cream Puffs With Cherry Sauce
Combine In Gourmet Dessert

Got your eye on a new living room set? Or a new Spring wardrobe? Or maybe a little car all your own? Then here's the perfect dish for softening up the keeper of the checkbook. Serve up his favorite dinner . . . which probably means steak . . . and then top it off with "light as a dream" cream puffs topped with canned Sweet Cherry sauce. Believe me, that'll lift the checkbook right out of his pocket.

Seriously, of course, we wouldn't want you to do anything so underhanded. After all, that's taking unfair advantage of the opponent but if you do want to serve up an extra-special, super-scrumptious dessert one of these days, try this combination.

Once you've tasted how good this sweet cherry sauce is, you'll think of all kinds of ways to combine it with favorite dishes from your own private recipe file. The possibilities are endless.

There's something about dark canned Sweet Cherries in any form that's irresistible. They seem to have absorbed some of the romance of the great Pacific Northwest slopes from which they come or perhaps it's because the pioneers who first experimented and cultivated the sweet cherry as we know it today, unconsciously produced a fruit with that strange, exotic flavor which was part of the drive that lured them Westward. Whatever the reason, it's as impossible to turn down Sweet Cherries once you've tasted them as it is for a thirsty man to turn from water.

So if you want a surefire way to please your guests, keep serving Sweet Cherry dishes, especially these delightful cherry cream puffs.

CHERRY SAUCE

- 1 No. 2 can dark Sweet Cherries
- 1 1/2 tablespoons cornstarch
- 1 1/2 tablespoons lemon juice
- 3 tablespoons sugar
- 1 tablespoon butter
- 1 tablespoon grated orange rind

Drain and pit cherries. Combine cornstarch and sugar thoroughly and add to cherry juice and lemon juice. Add butter, orange rind and cook over low heat until thickened, stirring constantly. Add cherries and heat well. May be served warm or cold over cream puffs.

Explorer's Flag

—Washington—

The National Geographic Society has received a faded and battered flag set at the top of the world on April 6, 1909, by Rear Admiral Robert E. Peary, conqueror of the North Pole.

The symbol of the conquest of the Arctic was presented to the society by Mrs. Marie Peary Stafford of Washington in behalf of her 91-year-old mother, who stitched the flag for her famed explorer husband in 1898. The admiral's wife now lives in Portland, Maine.

The 45-star flag has several pieces missing. Admiral Peary clipped six sections and left them at various locations in the Arctic. Only two have been recovered.

Dr. John Oliver La Gorce, society president, and Dr. Gilbert Grosvenor, chairman of the society's board of trustees, accepted the tattered flag for the society and promised it an honored place in the society's Explorers Hall.

Dr. Grosvenor recalled that Admiral Peary carried the silken flag wrapped around his body on his later Arctic expeditions that reached a climax when he discovered the Pole.

"Freedom of the Ballot"

That this country was founded by hardy emigrants who believed in two fundamental principles: freedom of worship and freedom of the ballot. Any American who neglects his faith will sell his soul.

These two principles are so thoroughly American that no man, deigning to call himself free, will violate them.

We are called upon next week to exercise our preference for a number of candidates. For whom you vote, no one will know; no one will persecute you later for exercising your constitutional right.

But, if you permit someone else—some person or some political closed corporation—to dictate to you, you fall far below the category of an American or a Christian, the two greatest God-given privileges of any man!

In each precinct of our County, two elected persons represent that unit in the party organization. It is the duty of these committeemen in primaries to assist the members of their party to get to the polls and to know who are the candidates of their respective parties. It is not their duty to pick any certain candidate and attempt to force him upon the majority of the voters. If it is possible for a candidate to secure such workers in his party by promise of patronage, money or other means—and the voters allow this very small minority to control their choice—then our people are governed by a smaller percentage of persons than govern the Communist countries.

There is no way to overcome this possibility except that all voters get out. There is nothing to fear from minorities or politicians if even 80% of the voters get out on election day. The only fear is that the politicians will win our County by default of ourselves.

Chain Letter Proving Barnum Right;
Still 'One Born Every Minute'

—Washington—

Twenty years ago this Spring a Denver resident—name, age and sex unknown—dropped a letter in a mail box and started a minor social revolution.

The letter seemed innocent enough, but it included a magic formula that proved irresistible to a nation coming out of a great depression.

"Send a dime to the name at the top of this list," the unknown author wrote, "and mail copies of this letter to five friends.

"Do not break the chain."

If everyone followed instructions, the letter said, a measly 10-cent investment, plus postage, would fetch home $1,562.50.

Soon the glad words were prattled everywhere. Prosperity clubs . . . faith, hope, prosperity . . . send a dime and redistribute wealth. Manna, it was wonderful!

The Denver postmaster, J. O. Stevic, did his best. He warned that chain letters violated the lottery laws and that in the end no one could win, anyway. This statement brought so many person-to-person howls of protest the postmaster had to disconnect his telephone.

Before the epidemic burned itself out, scarcely a mailbox was spared. Nor has the disease ever been conquered completely.

Repeatedly there have been flareups. Such as that housewife's delight of a decade ago, the pyramid clubs. They were the old chain letter idea under another name.

Early this year chain letters flourished in Seattle. Last month the Post Office Department warned that something labelled "this is a give-away-your-wealth campaign," and involving U. S. savings bonds, was merely a variation of the chain letter game.

It introduced new rules to try and keep everyone honest in an illegal business. The list was passed only by hand and only after the recruit had mailed a bond receipt to the person at the head of the list.

The Post Office said both the Department of Justice and the Internal Revenue Service are investigating the bond gimmick. It has been spotted in the east and the south.

Possibly the unknown originator of the dime chain letter had no idea what he or she was starting. But once the first letter was mailed the damage was done. A single exposure caused a national infection, and no cure was in sight.

At the height of the craze, a Denver restaurant owner advertised:

"I have so far received 2,300 of these send-a-dime letters. I can't answer them and they are delaying my legitimate business correspondence. Please, friends, don't send any more."

In Los Angeles, professional reasoning was tried. Dr. D. Victor Steed, a University of Southern California mathematics teacher, figured it out soberly, sensibly.

"If it takes 15,625 persons to contribute $1,562.50 to one person," Steed said, "a total of 244,140,625 letters must be circulated for each of the original 15,625 to receive a like amount. This is more than twice the population of the United States."

Irrefutable? Yes. And the daily sale of stamps in Los Angeles soared to 230,000 above normal.

In Springfield, Mo., factories were set up to turn the letters out wholesale.

In New York City a postman buckled under the strain. Apparently tired of waiting for his own treasures to pour in, he began opening other people's faith, hope and prosperity mail—and wound up under indictment.

Union League Club versions of the share-the-wealth proposals sprang up. Why play for a dime? Let's make it a dollar, five, ten.

While this was going on under the main tent, the sideshows were busy, too. A one-legged man started a chain letter for right-footed shoes, and collected 5,000, some of which must have fit. A doctor, as a prank, started a chain letter calling for a bale of hay. He got one that very afternoon.

At its peak, the post office estimated it handles 10 million extra letters each day.

Fifty-Year History of Greene County Sports

By GEORGE N. THOMAS

RIFLE TEAMS

Although rifle teams of the Waynesburg Sportsmen's Association had excellent records in the late 1930s, they grew hot in 1940 and 1941 before the war broke them up.

Roy Taylor, Joseph Riggs, Fred Smith and Bob Wilson ranked highest scorers not only with the club, but among the best in the tri-state district.

Wherever they competed, in Pennsylvania, West Virginia or Ohio, they left reputations as marksmen and came home with medals and trophies.

Washington, Wheeling, New Brighton and even West Virginia's state champions, Manington, went down to defeat.

Among the members of the sportsmen's club was a young high school-age group, who had been shooting since they were old enough to lift a rifle.

Because it was rare to have five shooters (the minimum for a team) in school at one time, Waynesburg never organized a team.

But with the arrival of Ernest Cole, Glenn Sturm, Gerald Bristor, William Patterson, Virginia Lee Taylor, Jim Faddis, Walt Jacobs, Betty Thomas and Robert Brewer, officials sanctioned a squad and instructor worthy Scott took charge.

One of the girls, Virginia Lee Taylor, was the daughter of Roy Taylor, county expert and charter member of the Sportsmen's Association, and she inherited the sharp eye of her dad. It was average for her to hit 198 or 199 out of a possible 200 to lead the team.

Virginia Lee and Betty Thomas were joined in 1941 by Mary Frances Van Cleve to give the scholastics an extraordinary 1-2-3 combination that generally out-shot the boys.

Bernie Mulvaney came into the fold in 1941 to help out the boys. The kids were pretty good, but they needed improvement so Robert Wilson of the association's rifle team, volunteered to tutor them and instructor A. Ross Minor was sponsor.

Well, the high school teams lost only a pair of shoots each in those two years before Pearl Harbor.

Not only that, but from their ranks came three of the best shooters in the state.

The Greene County crowd had not bothered entering the American Legion tournaments until 1940.

Then they won the team championship, as well as claiming the individual state title for Glenn Sturm in 1940 and Gerald Bristor in 1941.

The year Sturm won it, Bristor was second, and the next time, Sturm followed Bristor in ratings. Hugh Brock, too, was among the state's top five men, and they all credited Bib Wilson for coaching them into marksmanship circles.

Meanwhile, the Waynesburg

Rifle team joined Altoona, Rock Springs, Union City, Warren and Robinson-Clay in the Hearst Postal League.

These were postal matches, where teams shot on their own ranges, and mailed in their scores.

Waynesburg led the league for some time, but like most competitive sports of this sort, the war put a halt to them.

With the outset of World War II, the gun club became increasingly important to the community and the nation.

Many members of the rifle team were not taken into the armed forces, instead they were asked to stay home and teach shooting.

Those who did go all qualified as experts and most of them became gunnery instructors.

But the ones who stayed behind had a busy time, too. They taught, for instance, members of the women's Ambulance Corps how to use various weapons.

The Air Force Cadets stationed at Waynesburg College were given special instruction by association's members.

Even some draftees voluntarily asked for lessons, hoping to ease their job later in the ranks when they probably would not have specialized attention.

This was a pastime suddenly turned into serious business—the home front helping national defense.

Independent, and Prepared for Peace or War

"A man loves a good gun, for it makes him feel independent, and prepared for peace or war."

So said Davy Crockett when, more than 125 years ago, the citizens of Philadelphia presented him with "Old Betsy"—the rifle he carried with him to the West and to the glory of the Alamo. So said Fess Parker when he, in turn, presented a replica of "Old Betsy" to Deputy Secretary Robert B. Anderson at NRA's Annual Banquet on April first of this year. So, in truth, has every one who has belonged to the National Rifle Association of America since its birth more than 84 years ago, for no words can better express the objects of our Association or the convictions of its members.

The affinity of a man—or of a boy—for a gun dates back to the early days of antiquity. It started when our earliest ancestor found that a club was of help to him in his struggle for food and existence. If it were a stout stick with straight grain, if it fitted his hand well, and if it had nubs that were efficient, then indeed it was a good club and he learned to love it. It was his constant companion. Sleeping or waking, at home or afield, it was never from his side, an invaluable companion in his search for something to eat or in the defense of his family.

As man became wiser, the club was replaced by the hatchet, the hatchet by the bow, the bow by the harquebus, the harquebus by the rifle. Whatever the type of weapon, it has been a true friend of the man who recognized its worth and who knew how to use it.

It was the weapon which gave man a sense of freedom and independence. It was a badge of authority and, many years ago, was limited to the ruling class. As firearms increased in quantity so that even the common man might acquire them, the monarch became less powerful and tyranny lost some of its sting. It was the weapon in the hands of the common people rather than an enlightened government that brought the Magna Charta and the beginning of democracy.

When our forefathers came to the shores of North America they were searching for greater freedom than had been their lot in Europe. Like their ancestors before them, they, too, came armed with the weapons of their day. In conquering the wilderness, in their search for game, in defending their cabins against the savage marauder, the blunderbuss, the musket, and the long-rifle all played an important part. They played their part, too, in winning the freedom which the Pilgrims had hoped to find in this new land.

The attempt of the British to confiscate their weapons and to disarm the populace was long remembered and long feared. It was that memory and that fear which fostered the adoption of the Second Amendment to the Constitution, guaranteeing the right of the people to keep and to bear arms as necessary to the security of a free state. Unfortunately, the memory and the fear have been dimmed by the years, so that today only the National Rifle Association of America is alert to the danger, and wages a continuous fight for the right of loyal citizens to keep and bear arms for lawful purposes.

Food and a gun were synonymous in Davy Crockett's day. Now, however, shooting for fun has taken the place of shooting for sustenance. Those of us who know, find it replete with enjoyment, suited to man or woman, boy or girl. Hunting afield or trying for perfect scores on the target range, the sport of shooting thrives on man's inherent love for a gun.

More than any other sport, shooting is not confined to recreation alone. It relates directly to the welfare of the nation. The experience gained while hunting paid dividends at Concord and at Lexington. The victory at New Orleans reflected the peaceful pursuit of game in the backwoods of Tennessee. The stemming of the tide at Chateau-Thierry was the result of innumerable days of training on the target range and of "shooting for fun."

It is not sufficient just to like a gun. A man must know how to use it properly, safely, and with accuracy. The education of our youth in safe gun handling, the organization and conducting of a competitive program on a National and International scale, and the training of our able-bodied citizens in marksmanship are major tasks of NRA. We are the leader in these fields of endeavor.

We believe in the principles set forth in the Declaration of Independence and in the Constitution of the United States of America. We believe that our independence was achieved because the stout-hearted patriot who battled for it, owned and knew how to use the flintlock of his day. We believe that the safe-guarding of that independence rests in an equally well-armed citizenry, trained in marksmanship. We believe that the right of loyal, law-abiding citizens to purchase, to own, and to use firearms for lawful purposes should not be abridged. We believe that shooting for fun should be encouraged in peace so that we may be better prepared to defend the security of this nation if need be. These are and always have been the basic tenets of the National Rifle Association of America.

Davy Crockett's America was a nation of marksmen. The America of our day must become once more a nation of marksmen if we are indeed to feel "independent, and prepared for peace or war."

—The American Rifleman

"We are entirely convinced that the majority of those who are 65 are still only in their late middle lives," said Dr. J. Harold Sheldon of Birmingham, England.
"The inexorable weakening processes of old age don't usually start until the age of 70," said Sheldon, who is president of the International Association of Gerontology (the scientific study of old age).
Dr. Sheldon, senior physician at the Royal Hospital at Walverton, near Birmingham, spoke at the University of Southern California.
