Rev. Corbly Descendants Hold Family Reunion

The John Corbly descendants held their 24th annual reunion at the John Corbly Memorial Baptist Church, Garards Fort, Sunday, June 26, in conjunction with the church homecoming.

Church services were held in the morning. A picnic lunch was held at noon in the recently completed basement of the church.

A program of vocal and instrumental music was held in the afternoon, led by the church pastor, Rev. Albert A. Hill, and was followed by the business meeting of the association.

The president, William Garard, a descendant of John Corbly and Abigail Bull Garard, she being the first wife of Rev. Corbly, presided.

Interest in the reunion has grown through the years. The membership now totals more than 200 families, and descendants from Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Maryland, North Carolina, West Virginia, and Pennsylvania now attend regularly.

An item of interest of the reunion was the memorial plates which the young people of the church have for sale to purchase an organ.

The plates have an excellent reproduction of the church and on the reserve side is a history of the church from 1771 to the present time.

The reunion is regularly held the last Sunday in June, and it is hoped that a larger crowd will be present next year.

Among those attending were Mrs. Edith Scott, Mrs. John Schmuck, Washington, Pa.; Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Brewer, Ruth Minor Morris, daughter, Lang, Mrs. Ira R. Fordyce, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Barclay, Mrs. D. R. Jacobs, all of Waynesburg, Pa.; Mrs. Eulalia Minor Lincoln, Freda Minor Brown, William Brown, Mrs. Cora Garard Steele, Mrs. Viola Steele Willis, Bonnie Willis, Rita Willis, Kenneth Minor, Guy Dugan, Josephine Grooms Dugan, Neil S. Hart, Mr. and Mrs. Moine Minor, all of Carmichaels; Madeline Minor Marshall, Beemont, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Minor, Dr. and Mrs. S. J. Titus, Mrs. Myers Crayne, all of Jefferson; Mrs. Mary Minor Dunn, Mrs. Eunice Corbly Morris of Marianna; William L. Corbly, Mae Brown, Waynesburg R. D. 1; Orme J. South, Lydia M. South, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Gabler, Charles Gabler, Mr. and Mrs. C. Austin South, all of Greensboro; Mrs. J. F. Hagerty, Charleston, W. Va.; Mr. and Mrs. William Corbly Lemley, Morgantown, W. Va.; Miss Hannah Hood, Mrs. Beryl Roach, Mrs. Anna M. O'Dell, Shinnston, W. Va.; Marie Minor Beach, Moine Minor, Wilbur Barclay, Welda Henry, Helen Jane Barclay, Janice Jo Barclay, Elizabeth D. Barclay, D. Wilbur Barclay, all of Garards Fort, and Cora Bradford Fuller.

Letters were read from R. A. Corbly, Madesonville, Ky., and Miss Nannie Fordyce compiler of the Corbly book, and the Wright family of Paxton, Illinois, all regular attendants, who stated their inability to attend this year.

Out-of-the-state people who have attended include Robert West, Bloomington, Ill.; R. A. Corbly, Madesonville, Ky.; Eva Corbly, Hendersonville, N. C.; Mr. and Mrs. Roscoe Wright, Scio, Ohio; Mr. and Mrs. Warren C. Wright, Morristown, Ind.; Mrs. Kiger, Marietta, Ohio; Corbly Paffenberger, Boyds, Md.; Mrs. A. West, Lost Creek, W. Va.; Mrs. Oscar Titus, Jefferson, Pa.; Mrs. Wiggley Burton, Paxton, Ill.

Officers elected were: president, Mrs. William Garard; vice president, William Corbly Lemley, and secretary-treasurer, L. Myers Crayne.

Robert West of Bloomington, Ill., and Joseph Gregg of East Liberty, Ohio, are the only fourth generation descendants of Rev. Corbly now living.

GOP Aims At Leader Budget

—Harrisburg—

Democratic House leaders are awaiting a Republican onslaught as they prepared to take up the first of a series of appropriation bills for Governor Leader's record $1.8 billion budget.

The measure, calling for expenditures of over $600 million for public education, was introduced in the House Monday.

Assemblyman J. Dean Polen, Democrat of Washington County, chairman of the appropriations committee, commented:

"We have held hearings with department heads on the budget but were unable to agree on budget cuts in committee. The only way it can be done is by a House vote.

"The bills will be presented in the original amounts called for the budget. If Republicans can cut the budget without impairing state services, now is their chance."

House Republican floor leader, Charles C. Smith of Philadelphia, announced over the week end a plan to cut $200,000,000 from the budget without hurting any state function.

Republicans have been critical of Democrats on the committee not making any sizable reduction in Leader's budget after five weeks of hearings.

Polen has countered with the accusation that Republicans have not been specific on where the budget could be cut.

Discussion of appropriation bills on the floor is expected to be heated and lengthy with Republicans preparing to go all out in their efforts to prove that the governor's budget is loaded with "fat."

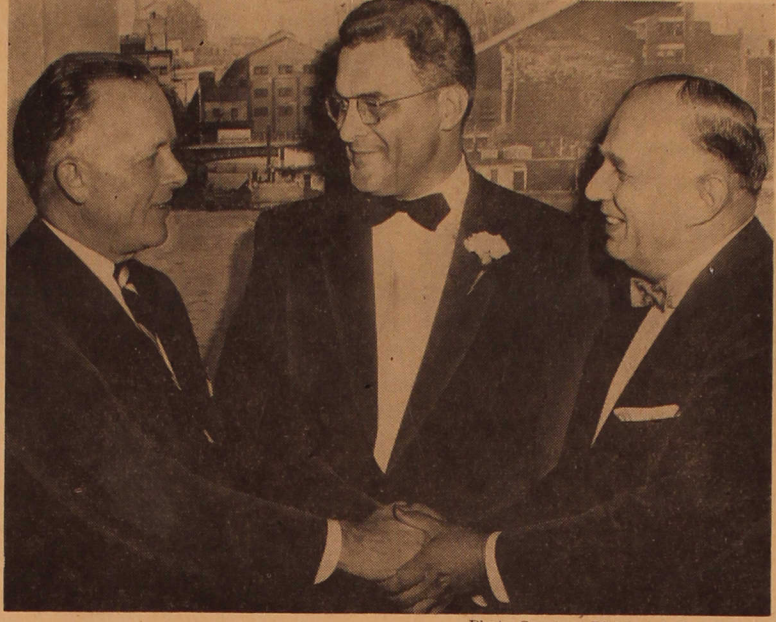

Dr. William Menninger, well-known Kansas psychiatrist, addressed a joint session of House and Senate appropriation committees Tuesday.

Menninger defended the need for an expanded mental health program in Pennsylvania.

Welfare Secretary Harry Shapiro is asking the legislature for approximately $44,000,000 more to operate the department.

Republicans Monday refused to vote for a $50,000,000 stop-gap appropriation bill until Democrat leaders offered a more satisfactory explanation that it was needed.

—Washington—

President Eisenhower has signed a bill to let the Veterans Administration pay private hospital and medical expenses of Albert Woolson, 108, last survivor of the Union army.

Woolson, who lives in Duluth, Minn., is not eligible for treatment in a private hospital at Government expense because his illness, lung congestion, was not service connected. Because of his age and condition he was unable to travel 106 miles to the nearest veterans hospital for treatment.

Wealthy Woman Recluse Leaves $2,380,000

—Douglas, Isle of Man—

Ellen Cubbin was a rich recluse. People called her a miser. She died at 80, leaving an estate worth $50,000 pounds ($2,380,000). And this is how she distributed the money:

40,000 pounds ($12,000), four houses and a small castle to her nurse, Jimima Campbell.

10,000 pounds ($56,000) to John Symonds, skipper of her 800-ton yacht.

The yacht itself to an orphanage along with 70,000 pounds ($196,000) to help train boys for the sea.

Her 15-room mansion to the city of Liverpool along with 80,000 pounds ($224,000) to make it a holiday home for children, and 100,000 pounds ($280,000), to buy four life boats and a fire engine for the Isle of Man.

The rest will be split among friends and more than a score of charities—churches, museums and societies protecting children and animals.

All the bequests carry one condition: They must commemorate the name of her son, Robert Colby Cubbin.

Col. Charles Faddis Receives Letters On Hoover Battery

Following publication of the article on Hoover's Battery by Colonel Charles I. Faddis, president of the Greene County Historical Society, in the June 8 edition of the Republican, Colonel Faddis has received letters from Thomas J. Hoge of Pittsburgh, and James B. Huss of Washington, D. C. Mr. Hoge gives the exact location of Jacob Hoover's gunsmith shop as the northwest corner of Washington and Greene streets. This would be the location of Marshall Lemley's grocery store.

Following are the letters: Pittsburgh, Pa. June 14, 1955

Col. Charles I. Faddis, Waynesburg, Pa.

Dear Sir: I was greatly interested in the Waynesburg Republican's article, or rather, your article published there, in the June 8 number. I would like to add my two cents' worth (?) in rebuttal of the statement that the gun was not used during the campaign of Hancock—or rather, the implied statement.

My first recollection of this gun is that I was tramping hay for William Orndoff in a field a short mile south of the Iron Rock school house, when we heard a heavy boom to the west of us. Mr. Orndoff said it was the new Democratic cannon at a Democratic rally at Rogersville, four miles away. At that time such a rally was quite common during a presidential campaign, and it was also customary to raise a liberty pole, the Democrats using hickory in honor of "Old Hickory" Jackson; and the Republicans taking poplar. These poles were the longest that could be had, and were sometimes spliced to give

Revenue Office To Close Here

A. J. Dudley, district director of Internal Revenue, has announced that the office which has been maintained in the Post Office in Waynesburg, will be closed as of the close of business Thursday, June 30.

This action is being taken as part of a nation-wide plan to provide better service to the taxpaying public and to improve tax administration. The object of the changes is to bring together at the local level all personnel stationed in a particular community in order to improve the service to the taxpayers and to obtain better employee supervision. To do so, every effort is being made to eliminate smaller posts of duty, particularly one-man posts, by consolidating them with larger posts in the same geographical areas.

Every effort will be made to provide service during the filing period so that in effect no reduction in service to the taxpaying public will result from the elimination of this post of duty. In some instances, Internal Revenue employees in travel status will be available from time to time to render assistance during the balance of the year.

The Pioneer History of Greene County, Penna.

By L. K. EVANS

Rebecca Shephard was the only white woman then in the bounds of what is now known as Greene County, Pa. The distance from Shephard's cabin to my father's was about three miles. Cook was to return every Saturday to see the corn. My father started over the mountains to bring my mother and oldest sister (their only child at that time) to the new settlement.

At the mouth of Muddy Creek, my father met Thomas Crago, an old acquaintance from Conococheague. Crago told my father he had two cows; that they gave plenty of milk and said he could make butter if he had a churn, whereupon my father directed him where to find his cabin and told him to take his churn and keep it until his return from the mountains. Accordingly Crago came in a few days for the churn, and on his return was met by four Indians, two men and two women. The Indians attempted to take Crago's horse to carry one of their party, who had been wounded shortly before on the Monongahela near Laurel Point by some white men, from whom the Indians had stolen some property. Crago would not give up his horse; a scuffle ensued; Crago got the sound Indian down, and one of the squaws took a rifle and shot Crago through the head.

The next day old Cook came to see the corn in company with John Moore, and when they came within three-fourths of a mile of my father's cabin they came upon the body of Crago. The churn was lying beside him.

Moore left his gun with Cook to watch the corpse, and gathering some of the neighbors, buried Crago and followed the Indians to where they had camped the previous night. They had not taken the horse half a mile before they tomahawked him, and at their camp they had tomahawked a dog to prevent him from barking, as was supposed.

After burying Crago, the party charged Cook not to tell Mrs. Shephard that he had been killed by the Indians, but when Cook returned, Mrs. Shephard asked him if he had seen anything of Thomas Crago, and he made no answer; she asked him the second and third time. Cook still making no answer, she asked him if the Indian had killed Crago and Cook told her then that the men had told him not to tell. This was telling her plain enough. A lie was unnatural to Cook. This story I had from Mrs. Shephard's own mouth, in June 1831, for she was still living and intelligent, although upwards of eighty.

Mrs. Shephard's reasons for thinking the Indians had killed Crago were as follows: Crago had as yet built no cabin, but with his two little boys (Thomas and Robert) lived in a camp by the side of a log. The oldest boy was eleven. The youngest had burned his hands, and every morning came to Mrs. Shephard to get his hand dressed. The morning after Crago was killed, the two boys came as usual to get Robert's hand dressed. They told Mrs. Shephard, "Dada has run away."

"Where has he gone?" asked Mrs. Shephard.

They told her he had gone to "Bill Crawford's" to get a churn, and had not returned. From that moment Mrs. Shephard suspected the Indians had killed him, for he would not have left the little boys all night by themselves.

About this time an Indian named Bald Eagle had been high up the Monongahela River, and was returning from his hunt down the river again with his skins. When about four miles below where Morgantown now stands, he was fired upon by a young man named J. S. — and killed, without any provocation whatever. The canoe with the dead Indian floated down to Provins' Fort, about two miles above the mouth of Big Whiteley, where he was taken out and buried. What became of his skins I never learned.

Some time after this, other Indians on their way down the river, called on D. S. — (the father of J. S. — who had killed their friend Bald Eagle). He told them there were bad men at Provins' Fort, that it would be best for them not to call there. Accordingly when they passed Provins' Fort they kept on the opposite side of the river.

At that time an Indian named Jacob, with his family, lived on Keln's Fork of Dunkard. He tended a small patch of rich bottom land in corn, and hunted. He continued there for some time, and was very serviceable to the white people living on the lower part of Dunkard, furnishing them with many loads of wild meat at a moderate price.

At length some lawless men whose names I have forgotten, came to Jacob's house and murdered him. Two of his children made their escape to Ohio, where they found some friends, but they nearly starved to death on the road.

It gives me pain to state these things, but truth requires it should be done. Notwithstanding the universal disposition of the Indians to retaliate for an injury done an individual of their tribe, there was yet no war.

But in the spring of 1774, when Cresap and Greathouse with their party killed a number of peaceable Indians (the particulars of which are stated in Jefferson's notes on Virginia), the people instantly set about building forts in every direction on both sides of the Monongahela River, with the expectation that there would be an Indian war. In this they were not disappointed, for in May 1774, the noted Indian chief Logan came with a party and killed a man named Spicer, together with his wife and five children, and took two of his children prisoners, to-wit: Betsy, a girl eleven years old, and William, nine years old.

As soon as my father received the alarm, he took my mother and their children to Jenkins' Fort and then rode all night to warn the people to fly to their forts for safety. The next day my father went with a party to bury the dead. The sight was dreadful to those who had never seen anything of the kind before, but to my father these scenes had been common from his childhood. One man said—

"For God's sake let us clear ourselves; the Indians are hiding in the high weeds near us, and will kill every one."

My father answered: "For God's sake you clear yourself. Such a man as you is sufficient to spoil a dozen good men."

Captain Logan sent on the prisoners and plunder with the main body of the Indians from where he killed the family, which was on a branch of Dunkard Creek called Meadow Run. Logan and another Indian named Snake came together to Big Whiteley Creek and killed a man named Kanear, whose body was not found for several days, till the buzzards led to its discovery.

Those two Indians, Logan and Snake, secreted themselves behind a fence near Jenkin's Fort the same evening the party returned from burying the Spicer family. The following narrative I will give as Betsy Spicer had it from the Indian Captain on his return to the Indian towns:

Logan said as he was lying behind the fence he heard a woman with a shrill voice call, "who will turn out and guard the women while we milk the cows." There was, he said, a long string of men came out of the fort gate with rifles on their shoulders, and when they came out they were pointing their rifles at different objects. Several times they pointed toward him, and he had sometimes thought of running, but laid still till night, when he and his companion stole away.

The next day Logan and Snake came to Muddy Creek, to the cabin of Flenniken, where they killed a cow and pet wolf; from thence to the cabin of my uncle, John Crawford, where they cut some bags of rye to pieces, and stuck a tomahawk in a big brass kettle, going thence to the cabin of Thomas Hughes, where they broke furniture and cooking utensils; from thence to the cabin of James Murdock, where they also did damage, and thence they went to near Vanmeter's Fort, where they killed a man named Wall. Mischief was done at the same time on the waters of Ten Mile, but I am not sure these two did it.

My father, with his black servant, Cook, and an Irishman, a weaver named John Sloan, started to my father's cabin to bring some necessities and to drive out a cow to give milk to his children. (I was the youngest). When they came to my father's cabin and loaded the horses, Cook mounted one and Sloan the other, each with his clasp knife in hand, intending if fired on by the Indians, to cut

Davy Crockett Proud Owner of Rifle Presented Him by Early State Gunsmith

Henry W. Shoemaker, Pennsylvania Folklore chief, has told the tale of Davy Crockett's one visit to Pennsylvania.

Elected to Congress in 1934, the new lawmaker made a string of visits which included Baltimore, Boston, New York, and Philadelphia.

"In the Quaker City, he was first greeted by a reception committee formed by the 'Crockett' or Crockett Society, composed of Irish-born and Irish descended Crocketts who threw a magnificent party in their namesake's honor," Mr. Shoemaker said.

"Their chief gift was a bronze image to the Crockett coat-of-arms from Donegal surmounted by a swan. The frontiersman did not understand heraldry, but remarked 'that bird is like a trumpeter swan.'

"Yet the Pennsylvania Dutch or Switzers were not to be outdone with a tribute and petitioned Jacob Mylin of Lancaster County, and grandson of Martin Mylin, the first maker of the so-called Kentucky rifle to part with his choicest piece as a tribute to Crockett.

"The Alpine gunsmith was just finishing his masterpiece, a replica of his grandfather's greatest rifle, the truest shooter, his first piece, by the way, at his little stone gun shop, south of Lancaster City recently marked by the Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission. He hurried by the first stage to Philadelphia to turn over his 'prize package' to the great Wilderness King's Dutch admirers.

"It was presented to Crockett at a stately reception held in the Franklin Institute's Club House by one of the younger Peppers a member of that great family of Pennsylvania-German philanthropists and civic leaders.

"Crockett grinned broadly when the handsome, 72-inch rifle was handed to him.

"This is the piece I have always dreamed about," said Davey, and seeing an aged huntsman in the audience, whom he had long wanted to meet, Betsy Warnock, the earlier counterpart of a later Pennsylvania Dutch world-beating gunner, Annie Moses, alias 'Annie Oakley,' he added, 'I will name it for the greatest lady hunter, 'Old Betsy,' after Betsy Warnock, and the crowded room, rising to its feet, shook with applause and cheers.

"Betsy was called forward by the chairman. She examined and handled the gun, kissed the trigger and turned it over to Crockett, amid a scene of tremendous enthusiasm. Then old Mr. Mylin introduced and shook hands with Chairman Pepper, Davy Crockett and 'Old Betsy.' It was a crowning event in Crockett's life and he bore the precious 'sure shooter' proudly away.

"Before the meeting adjourned, the fashionable local shooting club, 'The State in Schuylkill,' at the hands of Mr. Pepper, invited the great marksman to a banquet at their club house, on the Schuylkill, the following evening. Here 'The King of the Wild Frontier,' as he was called, sat

No Provision Made for Nags

—Florence, S. C.—

Robert Johnson was brought to court for driving through a stop sign with his horse and wagon, crashing into an automobile and leaving the scene before a patrolman arrived.

Magistrate Ben Maynard concluded the only covering statute was failure to stop at a stop sign. He fined Johnson $12.

No action was taken against the horse, which sat down on the hood of the car after the collision and kicked out both headlights.

at the table of honor. Colonel Edward Biddle, the amateur elk hunter on one side, Mr. Pepper on the other, while his great feats were eulogized by a dozen fluent speakers including Mr. Charles Florence, called the most eloquent orator in Pennsylvania. Other invitations poured in on Crockett, but he was so overwhelmed he felt he must break away after proving the sureness of 'Old Betsy' at an outdoor shooting match at Vauxhall Gardens where he killed 100 passenger pigeons straight with rifle shot.

"This account was handed down in the Mylin family who were pleased that they had given a gun to the world's greatest hunter, whom Colonel Biddle described as the peer or superior of Colani, the mighty Swiss nimrod, who killed 3,000 chamois in the Alps, and preserved the tale of Crockett's visit among their very choicest souvenirs which they would pass on to special friends."

The raccoon that wouldn't come down

They said old Andrew Jackson was so fierce he could stare a raccoon out of a tree.

So (the story goes) a friend made a bet on it. And "Old Hickory," who could be as obliging as he was terrifying, set out to help his friend win.

One night he and the financially interested parties went into the moonlit woods. They spotted their game, a small round silhouette high on a limb.

Fixing his baleful eye on the target, Andrew Jackson stared. He scowled. He glowered. He glared all night—but the raccoon never came down.

Even so, Andrew Jackson hadn't failed. For at sunup the men saw that what he had been staring at wasn't a raccoon after all, but a huge knot on the tree. And he had stared some of the bark off that!

Keep Freezer Filled Through Year Is Advice Offered By Home Economists

By IRA MILLER
Farm Electrification Bureau

Farm and home freezers should be kept filled the year 'round to get the most value out of them in economy and pleasure. As you remove meats, fruits and vegetables, fill the space with pre-cooked foods, say home economists.

It is suggested that farm women sit aside an occasional family baking peanut butter or other fats and shortenings. Use pure vanilla and double-acting baking powder, as well as fresh shortenings and fats. Baked products should be cooled thoroughly before wrapping for the freezer.

Many heat-and-serve foods can also be frozen successfully. Among those to consider are creamed dishes, chicken a la king, fish dishes, meat loaves, meat balls, roast meats, poultry, soups, stew, spaghetti sauce, day to prepare enough extra "freezer" goods. Cookies, quick breads and pies are particularly satisfactory for freezing. As a rule, baked products keep longer in the freezer. However, many folks prefer to freeze unbaked pies, saying that they seem to taste fresher when baked after freezing. Here are some suggestions: be careful of any off flavor in lard, baked beans, vegetables or fruit purees, baked apples and steamed puddings. Avoid over-cooking and do not refreeze cooked foods after they have thawed.

Quick freezing captures and preserves the flavor and goodness of fresh vegetables. However, they should be carefully selected, processed and placed in the freezer within two hours after they come from the garden. If you "grow your own" gather your "freezer" vegetables in the cool of the morning. All vegetables, with the exception of celery, radishes and salad greens, can be frozen successfully. Do not permit packaged food to remain at room temperature any longer than is absolutely necessary.

WW-II Training Deadline Nears

The Veterans Administration reminds World War II veterans training under the original GI Bill that July 25, 1956, marks the end of the program for all but a handful of them. This deadline applies even though a veteran may still have unused GI training entitlement at that time, or even though he may be in the middle of a course, the VA added. World War II GI trainees were advised to keep the deadline in mind in working out plans for the remainder of their training programs. The small group of veterans exempt from the July 25, 1956 deadline are those who enlisted, or re-enlisted under the Armed Forces Voluntary Recruitment Act, between October 6, 1945 and October 5, 1946. These veterans have nine years from the end of their enlistment or re-enlistment to complete their training.

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

A low camera angle provided the neutral, and natural sky background for this shot.

The Importance of Background

WHEN you get an envelope of snapshots back from your photographer, have you noticed that in some of them your subject seems to stand out much more than in others? You may even have taken the two shots from the very same distance, yet in one the image seems much more prominent—even though it is the same size. If you study these snaps closely, chances are you can easily spot the thing that makes the difference—it is the background. What shows behind your subject is almost as important as your subject itself. It is a factor that makes your picture outstanding, if it is right—and can make your pictures most unsatisfactory indeed if it's wrong. The best way we know to define a "wrong" background is to say that it is one that takes attention away from the subject. It is one that tends to confuse the viewer's eyes. You can't tell what you are really supposed to be looking at. Too many elements in the picture compete for your attention. On the other hand, the good background is one that complements the subject, helps play it up, calls the viewer's attention to it. Such backgrounds can be roughly put into two classifications. One is the natural background for whatever the person in your picture happens to be doing—the flower garden for the pretty girl who's picking posies, the tennis court backdrop for the expert racket wielder, the wooded bank of the stream for the fisherman. These are backgrounds that play an important part in the story the picture tells. They are, in a sense, a stage setting for the action, actual and implied in your snapshots. The other type of highly desirable background is the one that's completely neutral. It adds nothing to the picture story-wise, but by being completely inconspicuous, it makes the subject stand out.

Samuel Askey Noted 19th Century Central Pennsylvania Hunter

—Harrisburg—
Henry W. Shoemaker, President of the Pennsylvania Folklore Society, State Museum, Harrisburg, said there was no greater hunter in Central Pennsylvania than Samuel Askey, from the Bald Eagle valley, who followed Betchtel, the pioneer, to Snow Shoe. "He was a son of Captain Thomas Askey, of whom notices will be found in the history of Howard Township, Centre County," Shoemaker said. "Samuel was fond of hunting, and frequently followed the Indian path to Snow Shoe on his excursions, and thus became familiar with the country which resulted in making it his home. "In the war of 1812, he entered the military service under General W. H. Harrison, from which he received an honorable discharge at the expiration of his term and returned to his home. Much of his time was spent in the forest and his success in killing game attracted much attention that he acquired fame as a hunter. The Rev. F. B. Boyer, who attended him on his death bed, published an obituary, from which the following is an extract. "The life of Mr. Samuel Askey as a pioneer and hunter will compare with that of Daniel Boone and David Crockett. Many of the most thrilling adventures with and hair breath escapes from the wild denizens of the forests have been heard from his own lips by the writer. He carried with him to the grave scars the result of wounds received in several contacts with panthers in which his life depended on his own presence of mind and the faithfulness of his dog. "He killed during the time he lived in Snow Shoe, 64 panthers and 98 wolves (to this the records of the county bear testimony) and about eight hundred deer and a large number of bears in the hundreds, the exact number not recollected. In one season he sold two thousand seven hundred pounds of bear meat. "His fame as a hunter was known by the Rev. Mr. Boyer long before he became acquainted with him, which was on his first visit to Snow Shoe in June 1840. He then heard him relate, in his own terse language and impressive manner, some of his adventures and encounters with wild animals. Afterwards he was frequently his companion and guide in his explorations of the country, and traveling over his hunting-ground, often pointed to the spot where he had killed a deer or a bear, and to the tree in which he had shot a panther. The following are a few of his adventures related by the Rev. Mr. Boyer: "When we were traveling through the forest on the Indian path he said, 'Stop a moment while I tell you an amusing and ridiculous scrape I had with a big buck near yonder tree (pointing to it). It was a long shot, but when the gun cracked he fell flat in his tracks. Supposing it to be a dead shot, I approached him without any fear of trouble. I had on a loose blouse with wide sleeves. I stooped over him, and with my left hand took hold of a horn, and with the right was about to apply the knife to his throat, when to my utter dismay and astonishment, he jumped up with great violence, a prong of one of his horns went through the blouse, and he gave me a tremendous whirl, in doing which he relieved me of the blouse and departed, leaving me in my shirt sleeves to look after him going through the brush at the top of his speed, with the blouse spread out to the wind like the flag of a conquering hero. I did not begrudge him the blouse, because I thought if I had not been relieved of it the result would have been more serious. "In watching the Big Moshannon Licks as my custom was to start in time to get there before sunset, as I often found deer in about that time. On this occasion I was sliding down the hill, looking out for deer, when I heard a stirring of the leaves behind me, and looking back over my shoulder, I saw a very large panther sliding after me and about to pounce upon me. Knowing that there was no time to be lost, I quietly and quickly turned half around and put a bullet plump between his eyes, and he turned over dead, you may well believe to my great joy. My exposure to danger was the more apparent when I discovered that I was within a few feet of the carcass of a deer, covered with leaves, which he was watching, it being one of the occasions when they will attack a man. Venison is a panther's choice meat, and when he kills one, after satisfying his appetite, he covers the carcass and lays near, taking his meals regularly until all is consumed, or the meat becomes tainted. A panther will not eat tainted meat.

"A good tracking snow had fallen. I started with my dog and came on a fresh track between the Moshannons. I tied my dog to my body so as to keep him with me until the proper time to let him loose. The trail led to a high point on the brow of the Big Moshannon Mountain, which is very steep. Passing in front of a large projecting rock, a huge panther jumped from under upon the dog, and panther, dog and myself went down the hill, sometimes the panther upmost, sometimes the dog and sometimes myself. The cord being tied with a slip-knot I succeeded in effecting a separation. The dog and panther went to the foot of the hill, when the panther ran up a tree. I looked around for my gun, which I had let go, and finding it all right I went down, and having a fair shot, the panther fell dead to the ground. It was a female, and with indications of having young ones. The cavity was large enough to admit my entrance, and I brought out four young panthers as large as full-grown cats. After handling them for a short time they fondled on me like young kittens. It was a hard day's work, but the premiums I received for the scalps rewarded me, but did not compensate me for the disabling of my dog—he was of no use to me afterwards."

"Colonel John Holt and myself were returning from the Big Moshannon Licks. We had a horse loaded with venison and, when near the top of the hill, on the north side of Little Moshannon on the Indian path, my dog commenced barking on our left at or near the foot of the hill. I left Holt with the horse and on my route to the dog encountered large rocks. I crossed over one and jumped down some four or five feet at the lower side and lit upon ground so thickly covered for some distance all around with rattlesnakes, that every step I made I tramped upon them. It seemed to me like tramping over beef entrails on a butchering day. They were all moving toward a cavity under the rock. You may be sure I handled myself lively. I escaped from them without injury, excepting a brief sickness of stomach, occasioned by the stench which arose from the snakes. I did not stop to count nor to kill and have no desire ever to come across another rattlesnake den; some were of great length and thickness with many rattles. I soon found my dog, with a panther, in a tree which I shot, and returned with it to Holt, leaving the snake den off my route."

"Samuel Askey died on the 28th day of May, 1857, at the residence of his son, in Snow Shoe, in the eighty-first year of his age, leaving 12 children, 42 grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

Colonel Faddis Receives Letters

(Continued from Page One) more length. These things were supposed to promote enthusiasm in the voters. Mr. Orndoff was a Republican, and so not interested in the rally.

We knew Mr. Jacob Hoover, to whom charge of the gun was given, as a gunsmith, whose shop was at the northwest corner of Greene and Washington streets, and whose knowledge of guns was probably supposed to extend to field ordnance.

The old gun did valiant service in sham battles between the G. A. R. men and Company K on special occasions—once on the side of Illig's Hill, (or reservoir hill) and again at the old Camp Ground east of town. We hope it retains a place of honor in the annals of Greene County.

Sincerely yours,
THOMAS S. HOGE

Washington, D. C.
June 16, 1955

Col. Charles I. Faddis,
Waynesburg, Pa.

Dear Sir:

Your letter to the Waynesburg "Republican," June 8 issue, was very interesting to me indeed as I have often wondered whatever became of that old cannon—"Hoover's Battery"—which was always in the Democratic parades of the 1880s when Hancock and English were the Democratic opponents of Garfield and Arthur the Republican candidates for the President and Vice-President respectively. Well do I remember those parades at night as we marched behind the bands and that old cannon from one end of town to the other and the by-stands with our lighted torches and wearing blue oil-cloth caps and with capes on which were the words "Hancock and English." We youngsters looked with pride and awe at the old cannon and its handlers—Hoover and Symington!

I was about 10 years old at the time, and father had his D. A. office in the northwest room of the county court house and on nights of the parades it seemed to be the headquarters of the Democratic party. The D. A. office was later moved to the room above the sheriff's office and the windows overlooked the inclosure between court house and the sheriff's building and in later years was the place of the execution of three men. In recent years this inclosure was roofed and made an addition to the court house and housed the law library.

Yours truly,
JAMES B. HUSS

Fifty-Year History of Greene County Sports

By GEORGE N. THOMAS

HUNTING

When this century was about a dozen years old, such sanitary conditions prevailed that thousands of rats roamed in Greene County.

Hunters, determined to do whatever they could, continued the old-time rat hunts. These ended just before World War I, but not until after thousands of the rodents were slaughtered in contests. These contests involved two teams, usually ten men on each side, killing rats and turning in tails for a count. The team with the most tails were guests of the losers at a tremendous oyster supper.

Anyone who didn't believe such hunts were productive had only to count, for instance, the 3,641 tails turned in by one side compared to the 3,520 submitted by the other. And these shot in only two weeks.

Near Rutan, in 1909, Captain William Ewart's team brought in 757 tails, while Captain Claude Scott's boys collected 364.

It was serious business with the hunters, with a spice of competition added. It was not on account of the rats, Pennsylvania set up a state game commission to protect other animals. Deer, virtually extinct when the game commission came into the picture. Hardly any were left.

So one of the first acts of the group was to buy 175 deer from Michigan and stock them, while prohibiting hunting of them by law. At the half century the deer family had multiplied to 800,000. In October 1910, a dispatch from the commission to hunters read:

"It is legal to kill squirrels, quail and pheasants, but not rabbits. Squirrels may be killed from October 15 to December 1; quail from October 15 to December 1; woodcock from October 1 to December 15; rabbits from November 15 to December 15. "There are restrictions as to the amount of game to be killed in one day and it is illegal to hunt rabbits with ferrets." Of course, the game commission didn't have a smooth time operating in the state. Narrow-minded state officials refused to give it money and for several years Greene County's John Phillips and a group of men from Pittsburgh, financed it themselves.

In 1911, they struck upon a plan for some income. The commission began selling hunting licenses and it began long-range planning. The group began buying game land to establish refuges for animals. Slowly and steadily it bought the "inner lands."

In 1915 the state went one step further. A new law forbade hunting for profit. And hunters were forbidden to sell game or to transport it without accompanying it. At the same time the law said squirrels, woodcock, quail, wild turkey, grouse, Mongolian or ringneck or English pheasant, blackbirds or Hungarian quail and deer could be hunted for 45 days, rabbits 30 days, and bear and raccoon longer.

And this chart was posted through the county and state:

BAG LIMIT
	Per Day	Per Week	Per Season
Quail	8	25	40
Pheasant	4	10	20
Squirrel	6	20	40
Rabbit	10	30	60
Hare	3	15	30

And it was unlawful to shoot at doe or fawn. Two weeks after Congress declared war against Germany in 1917, State Senator J. W. Stewart of Greene County, introduced a bill in the Legislature making it unlawful to hunt or kill game animals and birds in the state during the next two years or during the war.

He pointed out that the use of powder and cartridges by hunters decreased the ready supply for the armed forces of the nation. He received little argument. Soon as the Armistice was signed hunters took to the countryside to shoot up over a million and a half rabbits, and when the boys returned home in 1919, the kill was even bigger.

The following fall George Matthews, hunting just outside the county boundaries, shot four squirrels with just one shot. The 66-year-old hunter nearly became the fifth victim from the Johnny Popovich of Monessen, former assistant to Jack Wiley, has been named head football coach at Waynesburg College. Announcement of his selection was made Friday following a meeting of the appointments committee of the board of trustees.

Popovich Named Yellow Jacket Football Coach

Popovich played college ball at St. Vincent College, where he was a halfback, and later played for the Pittsburgh Steelers. Completing his undergraduate work at Waynesburg College, he assisted Jack Wiley as a backfield coach. Since his graduation in 1954 he has engaged in Community Center athletic work at Monessen.

His selection is expected to be a popular one as he has been a favorite with the players still on the squad who played while he was on the coaching staff. In fact, when Wiley resigned the players at that time expressed the hope that Popovich would get a chance at the job.

The likeable Monessen resident was also highly recommended by Wiley, who regarded "Poppy" as a valuable aide. "I am sure he will do a fine job as he has both the experience and the ability and a fine personality," Wiley said.

No Easy Trick

The last middleweight champion to win the light-heavyweight crown was Harry Greb, who turned the trick in 1923.

The largest herd of performing elephants ever assembled is featured in the new 1955 edition of Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus, which will appear in Pittsburgh on July 6 to 8.

Nearly two hundred tons of elephants participate in the spectacle, "Mama's in the Park," a fantasy in which bonneted monsters wheel trumpeting offspring in gigantic baby carriages.

To stage this massive production, John Ringling North imported twenty new baby elephants from India and added to his already vast adult herd.

"Holidays," most glittering of the extravaganzas created for the new show, presents a kaleidoscope of colors, costume and floats. Hundreds of human and animal artists participate in this pageant dedicated to the festive days on the American calendar.

Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey To Show in Pittsburgh for Three Days

The aerial ballet this year features bevy of beauties revelling in a romantic aura of South Pacific charm. The stirring patriotic finale, entitled "Rainbow Round the World," brings a final burst of color and beauty to the latest entertainment triumph of John Ringling North.

In addition to producing the four spectacles, Mr. North composed all the music for them.

A host of new acts appearing in America for the first time thrill and amaze spectators this year. And of course, there are lots of clowns and cages of rare wild animals. An 80-car circus train is required to move this colossus from city to city.

Performances are held at 2:15 and 8:15 p. m., with doors opening at 1 and 7 p. m.

Pennsylvania's 'Wild Duck' Plan On Schedule

The Game Commission's duck rearing and releasing program, now in its fifth year, is going according to plan. That is the word from the so-called duck factory on State Game Lands No. 213, Crawford County. The waterfowl are reared there from day-olds to five weeks of age, then liberated.

The Commission's Waterfowl Coordinator, Robert E. Latimer, says the aim this year is to rear and release as many ducks as in 1954. Last year over 8,000 of the fowl, almost entirely mallards, were freed in marshes, beaver dams and other out-of-the-way places in the state. These ducklings are leg-banded before being set free. The bands carry the Pennsylvania Game Commission identification and serial numbers. Hunters who bag banded ducks and persons who find them dead of any cause are asked to report the birds to the Commission. These reports are valuable in tracing migratory patterns.

Under a new experiment the eggs from 250 wild mallard hens that mated with wild drakes are being incubated at the Commission's Western Game Farm near Cambridge Springs. These day-old birds will be reared and released in the same manner as purchased ducklings. Records on them will be carefully watched to learn whether these birds acclimate themselves, when liberated, more quickly than day-olds bought from propagators.

Under this year's program the first ducks were liberated the week of May 9. A schedule of weekly releases will continue until the latter part of this month. By that time the leg-banded ducklings will have been liberated in all parts of the Commonwealth.

Disabled Vets Get Fish License Free

The Fish Commission has announced that Senate Bill 114 was approved and signed by the Governor May 11, and is now known as Act 22, effective date September 1, 1955. This bill amends the Act of May 2, 1925, P. L. 448, authorizing the issuance of free licenses to disabled veterans of any war or armed conflict.

Wheeling Preps For Summer Meet

Applications have been received for 300 of the 770 available stalls at Wheeling Downs for the 55-day summer race meeting which opens Saturday, July 23.

The stable area will be opened to horsemen July 6. Horses must be on the grounds July 23 or their stall allotments will be cancelled.

Most of the horses participating in the summer meet will be shipped to Wheeling from Waterford Park, Fairmont Park, River Downs, Thistle-down, and Ak-Sar-Ben.

Horses will be permitted to work out on the half-mile track immediately upon their arrival.

Present plans for the meet call for six handicap races and seven endurance races. The entire program and purse distribution will be announced in the near future.

Wildlife Projects May Get Boost

Wildlife refuges and projects of the state could share in a $13,467,468 federal fund under a bill reported to the Senate by its Commerce Committee. The fund results from federal excise taxes collected from 1939 to 1947 on firearms and ammunition that Congress earmarked for federal aid to wildlife restoration.

States obtain the funds on a matching basis of $1 for each $3 of federal aid. During the eight year period Congress appropriated less than collected.

The Senate bill would authorize distribution of this over a five year period on a basis of 20 per cent a year.

Olympic Head Hopes For Uniform Rules

Avery Brundage, president of the International Olympic Committee, said Sunday he hoped the IOC soon will "establish amateur rules applicable to all sports, all countries and all classes of society." Brundage said he was disappointed that the organization did not take up the question during its meeting here last week.
