An Old Time Circular Hunt

(This interesting article was written in 1896, for the Centennial Edition of the Republican by Honorable James W. Hays, deceased).

In response to the request of the Republican for something in the way of a "reminiscence" of events or happenings in this good county of Greene of ours, of the long ago, I have thought some of its readers might be interested in the recital of the story of a "Circular Hunt" that came off in the west end of Greene County on April 20, 1824, now over seventy-two years ago, in which hundreds—it may be thousands, of the people of Western Pennsylvania and Virginia participated. It was regarded as a very important event by the people of that time, and will be yet remembered by some of our old citizens.

The writer of this, though but a small boy at that time, has a distinct recollection of the stir it made in Waynesburg, particularly remembering the spearheads, or pikes our blacksmiths were forging, with sockets, to go on poles, or long handles, to be carried by those forming the circle who were not better armed and might need them at the closing in of the circle, which was at the starting many miles in circumference, and was expected to bring a large number of wild animals into a very small space when closed in. The occasion is brought fresh to my mind by the turning up of an old newspaper—the Waynesburg Messenger, of April 17, 1824, then printed and published by Thomas Irons—the hunt coming off three days later—on April 20.

For the better understanding of the origin of this hunt and its results, it may be well to explain that at that date though the eastern end of Greene County was fairly well opened up and improved by cultivation and occupied by industrious citizens, much of the west end lay almost wild. Though it had been surveyed and laid out, mainly in four hundred acre tracts, quite a large scope of it was claimed by foreigners—that is, by non-residents—or persons not living in the county—the Cookes, Leipers, Stokelys and others. This retarded improvement, and the upper end was but sparsely settled—many holders and occupants claiming the lands under "tomahawk right" as it was called against the claimants I have named—a sort of "squatter" sovereignty that caused the dockets of our Courts to be covered by ejectment suits. The so-called "squatters," who as their title to the lands was disputed were naturally not disposed to expend much time or means in improvements, merely erected small round log cabins on their claims with clap-board roof held down by a log on each row of boards; puncheon floors, if any, as saw mills were scarce—a puncheon door, held together with wooden pins—a small opening in the rear of the cabin to serve as a window, with oiled paper instead of glass to let in some light. No locks on doors in those days—a wooden drop-latch answered all purposes for door fastening—unless it may be a wooden bar to drop across the door, in the earlier days when Indians were occasional visitors. The wooden drop-latch inside the door was usually the only fastening, to which a buck-skin thong was attached, a pull at the string lifting the latch, and the latch-string was always out to every corner, except it may be at night when the latch-string was pulled in. There were no wells for water, a spring always being selected as the choice spot to build near. Then with a few acres cleared and fenced in around their cabin, these hardy pioneers raised their little crops. When meat was wanted it was furnished from the forest by which they were surrounded, every man depending on his flintlock rifle to secure it. Hunting the deer was not only their amusement, but business also. Thus it was at the time this hunt was proposed. This log cabin period included the latter end of the last century, and the beginning of the present. Bear, deer, wolves, wild cat and other wild animals roamed the woods, and at times the Indians made their dreaded incursions. Such was the case in 1793 and '94. It became necessary in those years to seek organized military protection. Two companies of men under regular military orders, called by the state authorities, were stationed in Richhill Township, the headquarters being at the point still known as Ryerson's Station—some of the men a portion of the time at Enoch's,—now known as Graysville. Many of the now residents of Greene County are the descendants of the men who served in these two companies. James Seals, who lived in the stone house (still standing) at the foot of the hill at the west end of Waynesburg, was captain of one of the companies, and William Crawford (of Cumberland Township, I think), of the other. John Minor, afterward one of the Associate Judges of the County, was the Major General—the Brigadier and Colonel belonging to Washington County. In fact this whole territory at that time was Washington County, Greene not being formed into a county until the year 1796. The original muster rolls of these two companies were preserved and may be examined at any time in the Library of Waynesburg College, where they hang in frames upon the walls.

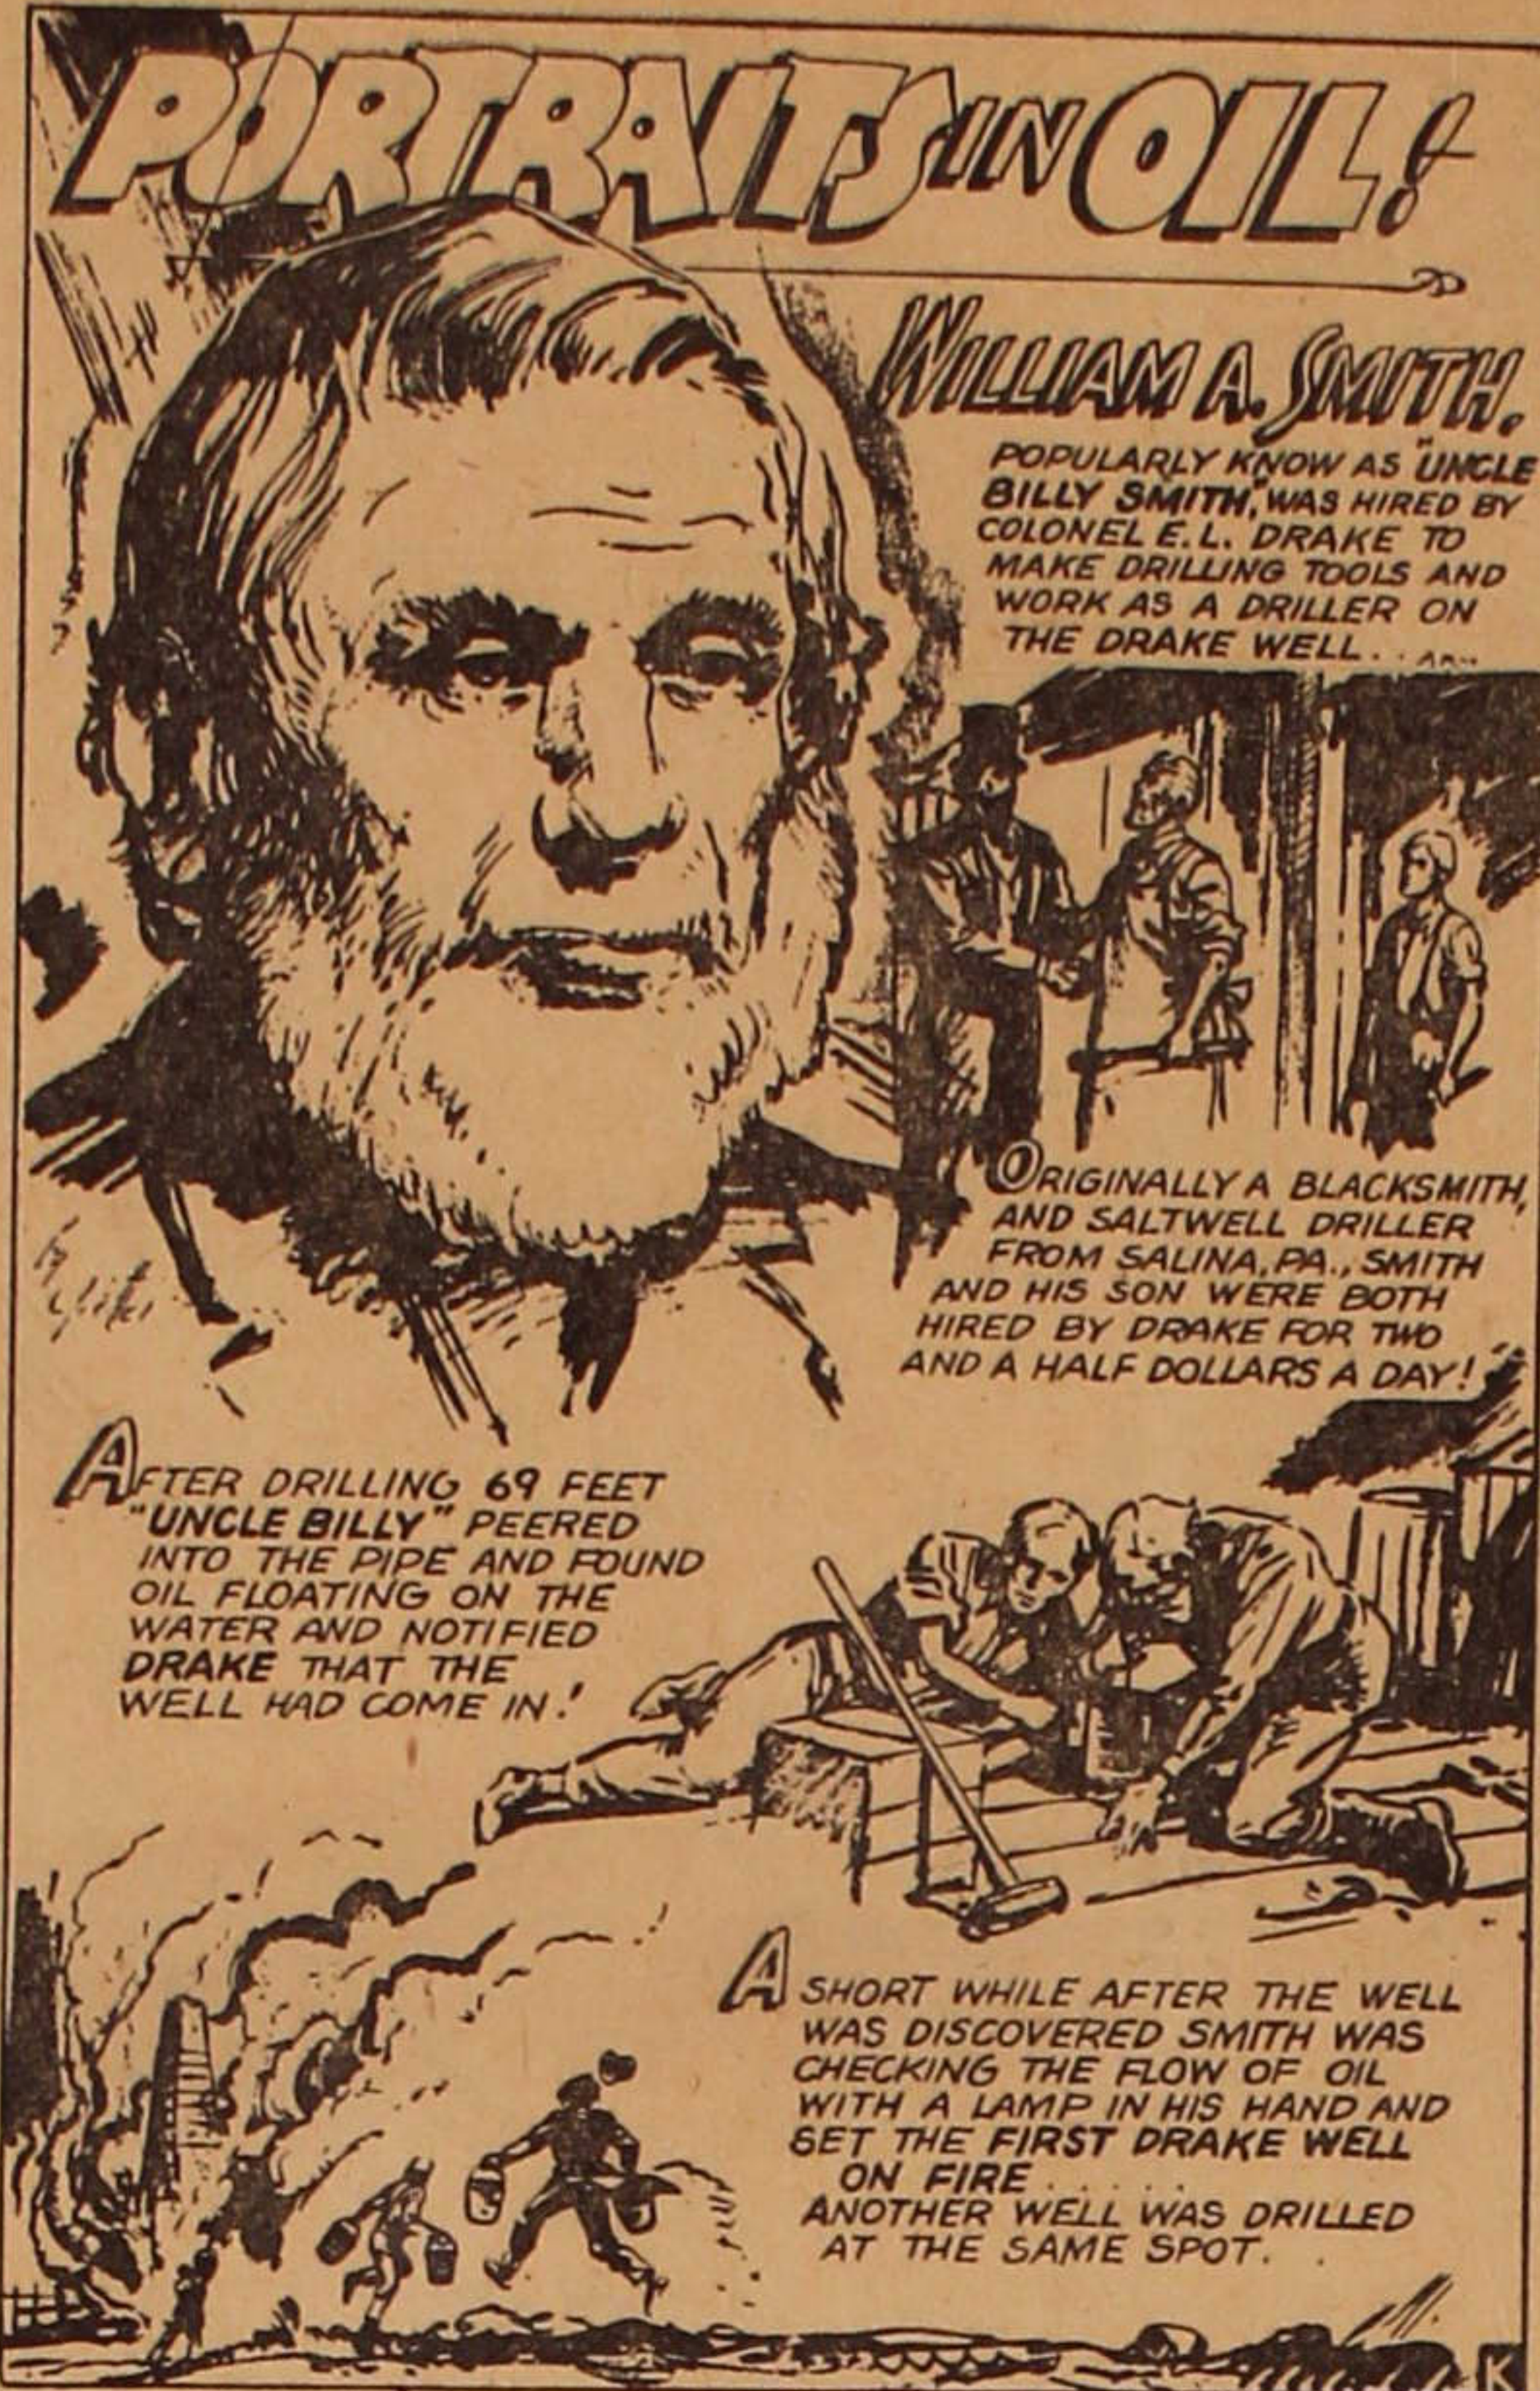

But to return to the Circular Hunt: as time went on some of these settlers on these lands—probably mainly on the north side and most distant from the wilds of Virginia and the Fish Creek hills, wished to raise sheep sufficient at least for their own family use, which was then hardly possible because of the wolves. At this time every family was clothed in homespun goods, home made linsey and flannel in winter and linen in the summer. These men were active in working to get up this great circular hunt. But, as tradition has it, there was some quiet opposition, particularly on the side next to Virginia. They were not yet just ready for such action. They did not wish the deer frightened, driven back, nor killed by outsiders. They wished the game preserved until land titles were settled, and they were ready to open up and improve their lands as undisputed owners. So when the large circle was forming on the day of the hunt, those opposed to it by quiet arrangement had themselves posted to form the line on the south side of the circle, and as it was contracted or drawn in toward the center a wide gap was opened and the deer allowed to escape through it back to the Virginia hills, to be hunted and killed as they were needed for family use. Tradition says the main part of the game in this way escaped.

The center, or closing in point of this hunt was where William and Frank Jacobs now own farms—then owned, I believe, by Jonathan Parkinson. That section of Greene County, and the west end generally, has made wonderful advancement in the way of improvement. The fertility of her soil is unsurpassed. Her hills and vales are now dotted with churches and schools houses. Greene County can now safely challenge comparison with any of her sister counties, if not as to wealth, at least in her fertile soil, her well tilled farms, her neat, comfortable homes, the morality and sobriety of her people, in short in everything that goes to make good citizenship, in its best and highest sense. The program of this hunt was as follows:

GREENE COUNTY WOLF HUNT

The wolves having through the late winter destroyed a great number of sheep on the southwestern part of Greene County, and still continuing to destroy many of these valuable animals—it was agreed at a meeting of a number of the inhabitants of that part of the county, and others, at the house of Jonathan Parkinson, Esq., that a Circular Hunt is proposed to destroy the wolves; and if the public choice would warrant the measure, to proceed to make such preparations and regulations as might be best adapted to execute the design of the meeting. Finding upon inquiry the measure warrantable, the following persons were appointed a committee to make the necessary preparations for a circular hunt on the 20th inst. and publish them, to wit: Messrs. Jonathan Parkinson, Esq., Stephen Elben, Robert Cather, Peter Hendershot, Thomas Morris, Matthias Roseberry, Samuel White, Harman Jones, John Jones, William Elder, Thomas Layton, Adam Hays, William S. Harvey—accordingly, the following lines were agreed upon to limit the close, and distinctly marked by a stake driven, or a tree blazed every two hundred perches, to wit: the first line beginning at Gillogly's place on Brown's Fork of Ten Mile Creek, in Morris Township; thence across the State road at Beach's Tavern by Isaac Ross and David Sellar's to Abraham Fordyce's—2nd line; thence by Widow Young's and William Morford's to John Utt's. Third line, thence to the head of Dunkard Fork of Wheeling Creek and down it by Thomas Courtwright's, Jacob Niswanger's and Connell's Mill to the mouth of Crabapple Run. Fourth line, thence by the road from Durbin's Mill to Samuel Teagarden's and by the road thence to Sargent's Mill. Fifth line, thence along the road by Robert Cather's, Henry Hill's, Gideon Master's James Patterson's, to Gillogly's farm, the place of beginning.

On the first line are 16 stations, on the second line nine stations, on third line 22 stations, on the fourth line 13 stations, and on the fifth, 13 stations, all marked and numbered.

On each line persons are appointed as Pilots to keep a direct course to the inner close to wit.—On the first line, station one, William Scott; station five, Matthias Roseberry; station 10, Micajah Wood; station 16, Richard Chedester.

Bill of Rights Put First by Medina

—Charleston, W. Va.—

"I would rather see Communists freed than lose one provision of the Bill of Rights," Federal Judge Harold R. Medina says.

The noted jurist stopped briefly at Kanawha Airport en route to address the North Carolina Bar Association at Asheville, N. C.

"I am for the Bill of Rights down the line," he added. "That includes the Fifth Amendment. It's easy to let your rights be whittled away a bit at a time. Once they're lost, you never get them back."

As judge of the United States district Court for Southern New York in 1949, Judge Medina presided over the trial of 11 Communists charged with conspiring to advocate overthrow of the government.

Pittsburgh's Carlton House Is the Coolest Place We Know

Lauchlan Maclean, Crown Official, Believed Writer of Junius Letters

—Harrisburg—

Henry W. Shoemaker, Pennsylvania folklore chief, asserted that Alexander Graydon, early historian, contended many literary people in Eighteenth Century Philadelphia were convinced that Dr. Lauchlan Maclean was the author of the sensational Junius letters which set England on edge from 1768 to 1772.

On that last year, Dr. Maclean came to Philadelphia as Collector of the Port. This position was long reserved for persons of importance, and the holders enjoyed a social position and distinction. Maclean's coming was sudden and unexpected, and theories of his reasons for preference were many and curious. He had been in Philadelphia a dozen years before, as surgeon to the Royal Irish Regiment.

"It was claimed almost from the day of his taking over the Philadelphia Custom House, he was the original of Junius, that the king had closed his lips by sending him across the Atlantic Ocean to redeem himself in the Quaker City," Shoemaker said.

"This important post was enough to silence his pen and put an end to the scandals his writing occasioned. What was the career of this mysterious but mighty columnist? It was said that he was born in Ireland at Dunmaine in the County of Wexford and had been a room mate of Oliver Goldsmith at Trinity College, Dublin. His association with Goldsmith made him envy his friend's literary powers and he looked for an opening to win praise as a writer.

"Though he prospered as a surgeon and politician, the way to literary fame seemed closed to him. One night a lady came to his offices to tell of some charges likely to be leveled against her husband. These could be diverted and his good name saved if Maclean would write some letters for 'London Public Advertiser,' which while not defending him would divert public thought to other characters and events.

"Before dawn the first Junius letter was completed, and carried to the mail box; the editors were amazed at its force and flowing style, it turned the thoughts of the Nation and completely cleared the career of the lady's illustrious husband.

"Letter followed letter in quick succession, each one more interesting, revealing, and towards the end, more personal and violent. Near to the last of 1771, the topic of the Junius letters came down to some of the friends and associates of King George, III, and it was agreed that they must be stopped. Malcolm was getting a trifle tired of his 'pet' the Monarch was told, a position in the colonies might appeal to and silence the anonymous writer. He was offered the collectorship at Philadelphia, and accepted.

"After a date in 1772, no more Junius letters appeared. They were never heard of again. The king and his court and many others of importance no longer had a source of worry though lovers of fine literature felt this loss sadly. In Philadelphia the word was passed about that the mighty columnist was in their midst. He was treated with the greatest consideration and respect."

GEORGE E. HEADLEY

George E. Headley, 71 years, died Saturday night, July 2, 1955, in his home on First avenue. He had suffered paralysis a week ago. Mr. Headley was a son of Newton J. and Anna Chess Headley, and was born March 30, 1884, in Richhill Township. On September 11, 1906, he was united in marriage with Della M. Pettit. He had resided in Aleppo Township 27 years, and later at Bristolia for several years, before moving to Waynesburg. Mr. Headley had worked as a general contractor in oil and gas fields in the county, but for the past seven years had been a janitor at Waynesburg College. He was affiliated with Long Run Methodist Church. Surviving are his wife and a son, George W. Headley of Elm Grove, W. Va.; a granddaughter, Billie Jo Wilson; a great-grandson, Lucius Hoge Wilson; two brothers, A. P. Headley of Moundsville, W. Va., and Oscar R. Headley of Graysville R. D., and a sister, Mrs. Flora B. Nelson of Waynesburg. Two brothers and three sisters are deceased. Funeral services were held Tuesday in the Centennial Church at Aleppo, conducted by Rev. Earl B. King and Rev. Walter I. Martin. Interment in the church cemetery.

Feet May Spread Disease to Livestock

Feet can spread contagious viruses and bacteria to livestock or poultry, warns a recent bulletin from the American Foundation for Animal Health.

"Whether the feet belong to flying birds, predatory rodents, stray dogs or human visitors is beside the question provided they are contaminated," says the Foundation.

"Whenever a contagious disease is present on your farm be fair and warn away all visitors from yards, feedlots or farm buildings. If possible prevent traffic of all wheeled vehicles in and out of your place. If visitors must come in, be sure they wear rubber footwear and wash them clean of yard dirt before leaving. "Couple all common precautions against disease exposure with a three weeks' isolation of newly purchased animals and you can usually avoid costly trouble.

"If any new animals show symptoms of disease a veterinarian should be called to diagnose the condition and prescribe treatment before it has a chance to spread," the Foundation concludes.

Old Age Aid Bill Advanced

—Washington—

The House Ways and Means Committee has voted for new Social Security benefits for women aged 62-65 and disabled workers over 50.

The committee also decided to bring within the Social Security System such professional workers as lawyers and dentists, and to include several other groups not now covered.

Chairman Cooper, Democrat of Tennessee, said he hopes for House action before this session's end. Whether the bill can clear the Senate this year remains doubtful, however.

Pay Debt, Put Ads on Money

—Louisville, Ky.—

Mrs. Ivy Baker Priest, treasurer of the United States, here for a speech, said she gets many suggestions about the nation's money.

One man told her he was tired of the huge national debt. Why not, he asked, just print currency on one side and sell the other for advertising?

Another person wondered why women's portraits do not appear on currency. Mrs. Priest said dollar bills once had a picture of George Washington on one side and his wife, Martha, on the other.

Carlton House Lounge Furnishes Soothing, Satisfying Refreshments

Population of U. S. Now 165,250,000

—Washington—
The Census Bureau estimates the nation's total population has grown to approximately 165,250,000 persons.

That was about 55 times the population when representatives of some three million persons signed the Declaration of Independence on July 4, 1776.

Nowadays, more babies are born each year than the nation's total population at the first national census in 1790, when 3,929,214 Americans were counted. The census bureau estimated that at the nation's birth there were fewer than three million Americans.

Last year the net increase in United States population was 2,823,000—births plus immigration, minus deaths and emigration. This was the largest numerical gain for any one year in the country's history. The Census Bureau estimated that in the first six months of this year the nation's net population increased by about one and a half million.

Seventh Grade Girl Good Reporter

—Danbury, Conn.—
The Danbury News-Times said editorially that there may be something to the idea of year-around schools.

Seventh grader Carole Gallo, who disagreed, quietly went into action, and with some friends circulated a questionnaire among fellow pupils, teachers and parents.

In a long letter to the editor, Carole said that: 37 of 46 parents interviewed opposed year-around school, eight of 13 teachers interviewed opposed it, and all 123 pupils interviewed were against it.

Phantom Thief Tale Related

—Harrisburg—
Henry W. Shoemaker, Pennsylvania Folklorist, told the tale of the phantom robber who was the terror of Pennsylvania lumbering camps around the turn of the century.

The phantom was a specialist in crime, confining his thefts to lumberjacks who were returning home after having been paid for a season's work.

He was credited with at least six murders but no policeman was ever able to trip him.

Shoemaker said the man is believed to have met his end by drowning.

"The phantom's game," Shoemaker said, "was to drink all evening with his intended victim. After the victim had drunk himself into a stupor the phantom would offer to take care of him and would carefully carry him to his room and put him to bed. The next day the phantom would awake to find that he had been robbed of all of his money, which usually was his pay for a whole season's work in the woods, often $500."

His depredations covered the period from about 1885 or 1890, to 1905 or 1906, Shoemaker said.

His trail of crime is believed to have come to an end when he was escorting a drunken woodsman to his cabin. The woodsman suddenly regained his senses as they crossed a foot-bridge over a swollen stream, recognized his "friend" as the suspected slayer of his brother. Throwing a "Sunday punch" at the man the woodsman clipped him behind the ear and knocked him into the raging torrent.

Some days later a body was pulled from a mill race five miles down stream and never identified. But after that there were no more reports of the phantom robber.

State Business Shows Improvement

—University Park, Pa.—
Improvement in Pennsylvania's industrial activity during May was reported by the Business Research Bureau at Pennsylvania State University.

The index gained two points to 11 over the April reading or an increase of ten per cent over the corresponding month in 1954, according to the Bureau.

The index uses the years 1947-1949 to establish a base of 100. Coal production, employe hours in manufacturing and industrial power sales form the index.

Congress Asked To Honor Davy

—Washington—
Congress has been asked to honor Davy Crockett in a formal and lasting manner.

Representative Bass, Democrat of Tennessee, in whose district Crockett was born, introduced a bill which would authorize the erection of a statue of Davy in the Capitol's Statuary Hall.

Bass declared the honor should be accorded Crockett as a national figure for his services as "pioneer, leader, and defender of the nation."

Local News

Second Lieutenant Louis A. Valli, whose wife, Frances, lives in Bobtown, recently graduated from the associate quartermaster company officer course at the Quartermaster School, Fort Lee, Virginia. During the 15-week course Lieutenant Valli received instructions in unit and organization supply, station supply, depot management, signal communications and atomic warfare. Training also included familiarization with standard Army weapons. A former employe of the U. S. Steel Corporation in Pittsburgh, Lieutenant Valli entered the Army in February of this year. A member of the Scabbard and Blade society, the lieutenant is a 1954 graduate of the University of Pittsburgh.

Private Jack C. Rogers, 21, son of Mrs. Harriet Rogers, Route 1, Pine Bank, recently arrived at Fort Lewis, Wash., and is now a member of the 2nd Infantry Division. Valuable combat experience obtained in Korea by the "Indianhead" division is utilized in the vigorous training of the unit. Private Rogers, a tank crewman in the division's Reconnaissance Company, entered the Army last October and completed basic training at Fort Knox, Ky.

County Girls Aerialists With Ringling Circus

With Ringling Brothers, Barnum & Baily Circus in Pittsburgh this week are Patricia and Alberta Hinerman, two Greene County girls who are now aerialists with the biggest show on earth. They are known as Rita "Dusty" and Patricia Hines.

The two attractive performers were school girls in Richhill Township, Greene County, near Wind Ridge, a dozen year ago.

Their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Burley Hinerman, lived on a farm at that time and as a hobby had a family radio troupe known as "Loyal Hinerman and the Knoxville Hoosiers."

The girls were featured as vocalists and it was their musical ability which led them to the magic land of dazzling lights, spangles and far away places of the circus world.

After the family troupe broke up, Alberta, the older of the two, joined Curley Miller's musicians which featured country music type programs.

The Miller troupe wound up in Sarasota, Florida, when the Ringling show was in winter quarters. Fascinated by the rehearsals she saw there, Alberta decided life under canvass offered more excitement than radio and personal appearance shows.

Some six weeks later, trained then as an aerialist, she was on the circus train when it headed for its 1954 coast to coast tour. Back home again last winter she related her many experiences to her younger sister, Patricia.

The stories proved so alluring that when the circus train started its long tour this season Patricia was on it, too.

Both appear in the beautiful aerial ballet number, "Honolulu Bay." Rita, or "Dusty" also does an iron jaw number and both girls have the long, long dream of eventual stardom.

Both girls still take time out to pen weekly letters to their mother, Mrs. Virginia Hinerman.

Their parents and five brothers, Loyal, James, Bill, Jack and Delano, will have a reunion in the circus "back yard" between performances during its three-day stay in Pittsburgh and Mr. and Mrs. Hinerman will become trouper for a day and go on to Youngstown, Ohio, for an extra day with their two daughters.

Linda Caught Prize; Mother 'Nose' It

—Memphis—
The odor of fish has almost quit the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Starr, despite the efforts of Linda, aged three.

Linda caught five small bream a few days ago and won a prize in the junior fishing rodeo sponsored by the Commercial Appeal. She didn't want to give her fish up.

Finally Mrs. Starr put her foot down. The fish had to go. Linda tearfully complied. But the potent aroma lingered on . . . and on. Mrs. Starr found out why when she apologized for the cruel separation.

"Oh, that's all right," said Linda, digging into the pockets of her jeans, "I still have two more."

Dog Returns At Boy's Scent

—Sault Ste Marie, Mich.—
Bobby Lawson, seven, of Center Line, Mich., has his pet, Sniffles, back now. But for 10 months the black and white mongrel dog lived here. Sniffles got lost while Bobby and his parents were vacationing. Bobby's mother wrote a pleading letter to the Sault Ste. Marie Evening News, enclosing a picture of Sniffles.

Many people saw Sniffles, but none could catch him. He ate with an anti-aircraft battalion or with the workmen at the coal docks.

The Lawsons made a 350-mile trip, but Sniffles chose that week end to be absent. They came back a few weeks later to find Sniffles living in an abandoned house. He fled when the grown-ups walked in. Then Bobby tried it alone. Sniffles got the scent and bounded into Bobby's arms.
