Solid Waste Disposal Authority Seeks $307,000 FmHA Grant

WAYNESBURG — The Northeastern Greene County Solid Waste Disposal Authority still hopes to have a refuse-transfer station in operation near Mather by early 1981 and is stressing the energy impact in the area to further its efforts for federal aid.

The authority, composed of ten municipalities in the northeastern section of Greene County, has made application to the Farmers Home Administration (FmHA) for a $307,000 grant and a $307,000 low-interest loan. Grant money, should it be approved, would be used for land acquisition and site development and preparation.

The state Department of Environmental Resources (DER) has reimbursed the local authority $7,500 for engineering and legal expenses.

Aid has also been received from the Greene County Planning Commission, Waynesburg Borough and Greene County Industrial Development, Inc., in filing reports and offering input into the project.

Morgan Township, a member of the authority, has also been asked for additional help in obtaining a road into the proposed site of the transfer station. The existing road into the property was found to be privately owned but the authority authorized its solicitor William Hook to work with the township in obtaining public rights.

Hook was also directed to again contact private haulers now doing business in the municipalities to obtain information on hauling costs. Because the DER may close the existing landfills, haulers would have to take the refuse to another county for disposal and consequently incur additional expenses. Higher expenses to the haulers would most likely be passed on to the customers.

According to a report submitted by Betz-Converse-Murdoch, Inc., the local municipalities have three alternatives to the refuse problem.

Develop and operate a new landfill conforming to current requirements. This would require 20 to 25 acres of ground and an impermeable liner and underdrain system. Such an operation would cost $965,000 initially. It was also pointed out that property would be difficult to obtain.

The transfer station, to which area contractors would haul refuse, would require but three acres and cost about $307,000 initially. This alternative would cost less to construct and would be much less likely to encounter local opposition than opening a new landfill, according to the report.

The final alternative is for the authority to do nothing and allow each hauler to collect and dispose of refuse as he sees fit. Typical round trips to haul the refuse from the county would probably average between 50 and 75 miles, which will increase each hauler's operating cost once all local dumps are closed.

Depending on the location, the increase in expenses would be passed on to customers. Rates could possibly be increased from $2 more per quarter in the eastern part of the county to $10 more per quarter in the western part of the county.

In conclusion, the engineering firm stated, "providing financial assistance can be obtained, the transfer station concept appears to be the most feasible alternative open to the authority."

The authority has supplemented its loan and grant applications with information about the energy impact on Greene County and its vast reserves of coal.

'Super Chicken' Lands Unmanned In Waynesburg

By JIM MOORE

Staff Writer

WAYNESBURG — Once again foul weather, or perhaps "fowl weather," has placed this community in the national news spotlight.

It was not Rain Day or flash floods which drew national attention this time. It was "Super Chicken," a ten-story balloon filled with 180,000 cubic feet of helium, that drew hundreds of spectators along Route 18, about two miles northwest of Waynesburg.

From the time it left the Mira Costa College campus in Oceanside, Calif., at 1 a.m. Saturday until it touched down on a golf course near Columbus, Ohio, late Monday night, there were two balloonists in the gondola.

When the balloon came down at 4:40 a.m. Tuesday about 40 yards north of Route 18, it was unmanned. One balloonist jumped out of the gondola onto a parking lot at the golf course near Columbus and the other made his first parachute jump a few moments later.

John Shoecraft, 35, and Ron Ripps, 37, had traveled thousands of miles and were ahead of their schedule which called for a landing between 6 and 8 a.m. Tuesday in New York. The two real estate developers from Arizona, both experienced balloonists, had high hopes of completing only the second cross-country balloon flight.

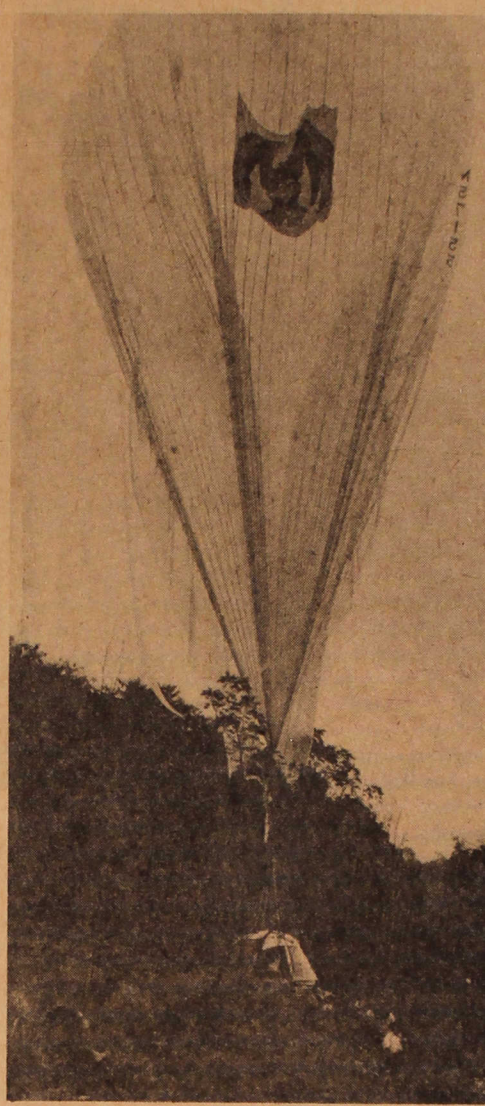

However, late Monday they had flown through two major thunder cells, and when the Indianapolis weather center warned them of another major storm ahead, they decided to abort the flight.

They were 70 miles east of Columbus when they reached the decision to land. Shoecraft told his fellow balloonist to jump from the gondola the second it touched down. Shoecraft jumped first and when he did the weight loss caused the balloon to ascend quickly. Ripps waited until the balloon rose to 1,200 feet and then parachuted.

Ripps was picked up by Sgt. Paul Bryant flying a Columbus police helicopter which was following the balloon. When Bryant flew Ripps back for a reunion with Shoecraft at the parking lot, the balloonists hugged and kissed each other in a joyful reunion. Neither man was injured but they were taken to a hospital emergency room for observation.

State police in Waynesburg were notified by "Butch" Brown of Super Chicken Control in Arizona that the balloon

Uniontown Man Pleads Guilty To Homicide By Motor Vehicle

WAYNESBURG — The driver of the car in which three Greene County men were killed last year pleaded guilty in Greene County Court Friday to homicide by motor vehicle, driving while intoxicated and failure to stop for a red light.

Donald Ray DeBerry, 38, of Uniontown, was ordered to pay fines totaling $950 and was sentenced to serve from 11 months to 23 months in the Greene County jail. Start of the jail sentence was deferred until the new county jail is opened in October. DeBerry will continue under $10,000 bail until that time.

The fatal accident happened Oct. 11, 1979, at the Paisley intersection, south of Carmichaels. DeBerry, traveling south on Route 88, ran through a red light into the path of a tractor-trailer traveling west on Route 21.

Those killed in the accident, all passengers in DeBerry's car, were Gerald Groves, 44, David L. Robinson, 43, and Robert W. Sabulsky, 40, all of Dilliner R.D.1.

Also pleading guilty Friday was David Bruce Halbert, 19, of Greensboro, who was charged with being one of two men who broke into a house near Greensboro and with setting it on fire.

He was fined $100 and was sentenced to serve from four months to 23 months in the county jail, with the sentence again being deferred until the new jail is placed in service. Because he is in school, Judge Glenn Toothman stipulated that he would be permitted to serve the jail sentence on weekends.

The incident happened April 22, 1980, at a house owned by Mae Slevin of Dundalk, Md. Assorted coins, a wicker chair and two antique clocks, with a total value of $250, were stolen. The fire caused damage estimated at $30,000.

Judge Toothman stipulated that Halbert would be required to pay the owner a pro-rata part of the loss, with the county probation department being given responsibility for determining the amount of restitution to be paid.

Nursing Home Expansion Plan Supported

By BOB EICHENLAUB

Greene News Editor

WAYNESBURG — The advisory board to the Greene County Memorial Home offered its support to the county commissioners Monday on a plan to expand the county nursing home by the construction of a new 42-bed wing.

"This should be done as soon as possible," board member Lawrence Piper said after meeting with the commissioners and with Tom Bontempo and Charles Smith of the Beaver Falls architectural firm of Wallover and Mitchell.

County Commissioners Joseph Pawlosky and L. R. Santore said they feel it should have top priority, adding that they and Commissioner Richard Cowan have had many people speak to them of the need for additional nursing home beds in the county.

They also said they feel the Greene County Court will support the project now since conditions have changed since 1975, when plans to add two wings to the institution were turned down by the court.

"The court, for a number of reasons, decided that wasn't the time to do it. But we feel it will be approved this time if the county can work out the financing," Pawlosky said.

Bontempo said the total project would include construction of the wing, a new boiler house outside the facility, renovation of sections of the central building to expand the dietary and dining facilities, the addition of a complete laundry and pharmacy, and other support facilities.

"Having the boiler room in the building is a big problem, and it is essential that it be housed in a separate building," Bontempo said, adding that this will make it possible to provide central air conditioning. At the present time no part of the building is air conditioned, which, staff members said, created a large problem this summer.

Total cost of the project, including fixed equipment, fees and contingencies, is estimated at $4.5 million, assuming that bids can be taken next spring. It would then require from 12 to 14 months to complete the project.

The first step will be to apply for approval from the Health Systems Agency of Southwestern Pennsylvania, but because the agency approved the project in 1975 the county anticipates no difficulty in again obtaining authorization to proceed. Before HSA approval is given, however,

DeFrank Loses Case

WAYNESBURG — Lucille DeFrank of Carmichaels, former director of nursing at the Curry Memorial Home, has lost a crucial round in one of the lawsuits she filed against the Greene County commissioners following her dismissal from the county nursing home in 1978.

The Third Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia has sustained action by the U.S. District Court in Pittsburgh which last November dismissed a civil rights suit which charged the defendants deprived her of her position without regard for her constitutional rights. In doing so, it placed the costs on DeFrank.

Defendants in the lawsuit were the county board of commissioners, then consisting of Richard Cowan, Joseph Pawlosky and the late Ernest C. Lemley; Thomas Boyd Jr., Curry Home acting administrator; four officers of Service Employees International Union Local 585, and the local union itself.

Mrs. DeFrank claimed the defendants acted among themselves to deprive her of her job as director of nursing and sometime acting administrator, depriving her of "her good name, her opportunity for employment in her profession... (and) her earnings and earning power, without regard for her civil and constitutional rights."

She contended, in essence, that when Boyd fired her on June 30, 1978, that he did so to satisfy the local union defendants who wanted to take over and dictate management functions of the home.

After the case was heard in U.S. District Court, Judge Edward Dumbauld dismissed the case on the grounds that state law gives county commissioners the power to appoint and remove employees without any requirement for a hearing or cause, and that there was no infringement of the plaintiff's constitutional rights.

"The plaintiff's contentions involving defamation and interference with advantageous relationships merely relate to simple torts, not amount to violation of her constitutionally protected rights," he ruled.

The Third Circuit Court of Appeals ruling upholding Judge Dumbauld's decision was filed by Justice R. J. Adlisert and was received by the attorney representing Ernest Lemley's estate, which became a co-defendant following his death. It was not accompanied by an opinion.

The case is just one of several which had been filed. Another case is still pending in Greene County Court.

Grant Application Receives Approval

WAYNESBURG — An application for a $10,928 grant for the Family Services office of Greene County was approved at the final meeting of the Southwest Regional Advisory Committee, Pennsylvania Commission on Crime and Delinquency, held last week in Pittsburgh.

Pending approval in Harrisburg by the state agency, the grant will be used in a special probation program for young adults convicted of violent crimes such as robbery, rape and theft.

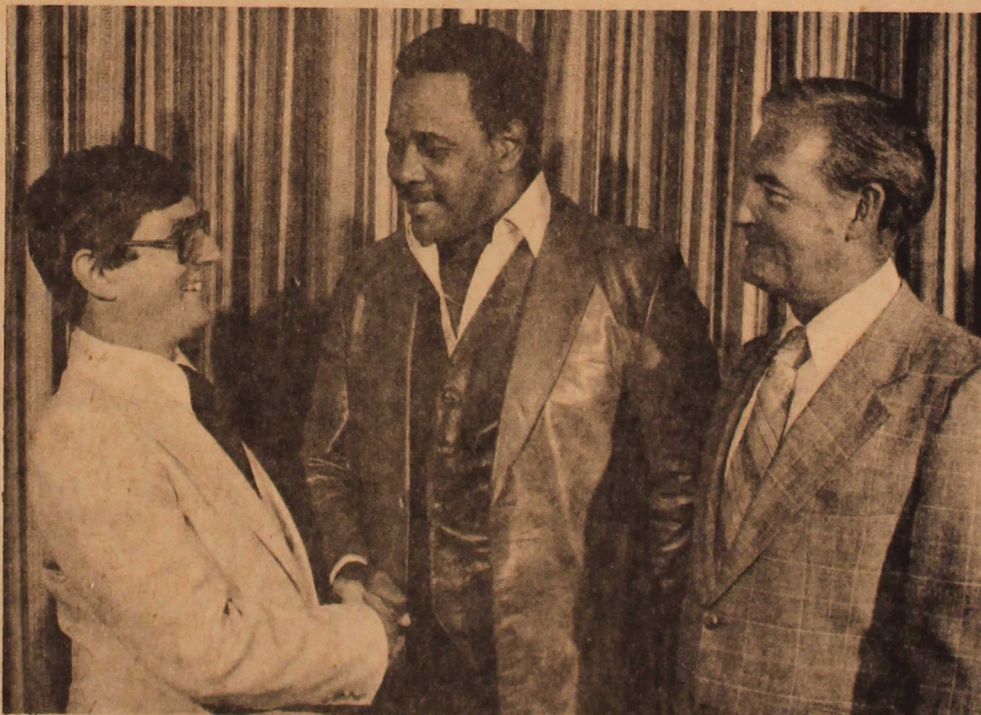

The program, which includes young men in the 18 to 25 year-old bracket, is administered by Charlene Carper in the adult probation office.

This marks the second year the program has been funded through the Pennsylvania Commission on Crime and Delinquency.

The state agency has been phased out for lack of federal funds.

During the past eight years, various Greene County agencies have realized over $500,000 in aid with the bulk of the funding going to the county. Over $100,000 was spent for the countywide, police radio network and some $90,000 was granted to Try-Again Homes.

Also receiving aid over the years have been the sheriff's office, the clerk of courts office and Waynesburg Borough.

Court Forbids Strikers To Disrupt Classes

WAYNESBURG — The Greene County Court Tuesday enjoined striking non-professional employees in the Southeastern Greene School District from interfering in any way with the holding of classes while the walk-out continues.

The strike, which is entering its second week, involves 22 people employed as cafeteria and maintenance personnel, janitors and custodians who are members of Local 585, Service Employees International Union.

Classes at Mapletown Junior-Senior High School and the district's three elementary schools resumed Tuesday after schools were closed Monday when teachers refused to cross picket lines because of harassment. They agreed to return after the school board and administration made arrangements to have guards at all buildings to insure their safety.

The only incident Tuesday was a telephone bomb threat at the Bobtown Elementary School. Students were taken from the building until it could be checked, and then were returned to their classes.

At the injunction hearing held in Greene County Court Tuesday afternoon, John Stets, school district solicitor, told Judge Glenn Toothman that he had been in contact with Adam Kushner, a Local 585 official at Pittsburgh, and had obtained his admission that allegations set forth in the district petition were correct and his agreement to abide by restrictions set forth in the proposed injunction.

Ron Weaver and Jack Burless, president and chief negotiator, respectively, of the Southeastern Greene Chapter of the union, were present at the hearing but offered no testimony.

The petition claimed the union had engaged in mass picketing, had stopped teachers and harassed them, and had played loud music near the schools to interfere with the holding of classes.

The injunction enjoins the union from placing more than two permanent pickets at each building; restrains its members from harassing teachers or from stopping them anywhere in the district, and forbids the playing of loud music or creating any other noise that can be heard within the school buildings.

The consent decree also stipulates that the court will retain jurisdiction in the matter to oversee lawful enforcement of the injunction. Judge Toothman also expressed the hope that the strike could be brought to an early end through negotiations.

Following the hearing, School Board President James Minor conferred briefly with Weaver and Burless, after which they said that it will probably be sometime next week before the next negotiating session is scheduled.

Delicate . . . graceful . . . symmetrical. Yes — and functional. So very functional! Charlotte has to eat, you know . . . this is her insect trap.

Nature is a lesson book in design and purpose. God seems to have taught so many of his creatures to meet necessity with artistry.

It's a lesson man has been learning for ages — with God's own help. Learning to add some beauty as we make our way . . . to enrich the scene for those who labor with us.

Concert

A benefit concert in memory of John M. Harris, husband of Jennie Lou Fredley Harris, formerly of Waynesburg, will be held at 7:30 p.m. Sunday, September 21, at the United Church of Christ in Somerset.

Featured will be internationally acclaimed harpsichordist Frances Cole, a college friend of Mrs. Harris, who is presently concertizing throughout the United States. She has performed in Europe and in such major recital halls as Lincoln Center and Carnegie Music Hall.

Mrs. Cole is currently the music critic and a commentator for the CBS television program "Sunday Morning."

The late Mr. Harris graduated from Waynesburg College and was a teacher at Somerset Area High School.

Proceeds from the concert will go to the John Harris Memorial Fund at the high school and to the American Heart Association.

He is one of 15,000 students throughout the United States who will be considered for Merit scholarships to be awarded in 1981. They scored highest in their respective states on the scholarship qualifying test and represent less than half of one percent of each state's secondary school seniors.

Henderson, a son of Robert A. and Edna M. Henderson of Waynesburg R.D.1, is president of the National Honor Society and editor of the school newspaper, as well as being on the yearbook staff and a participant in the gifted program.

He will enroll at the University Park campus of Pennsylvania State University in the fall of 1981 and plans to take a dual major in pre-medicine and either biology or meteorology.

John Barbero Appointed New High School Principal

WAYNESBURG — John Barbero, who has served as assistant principal of Waynesburg Central High School for the past five years, was named principal Tuesday to succeed Theodore Carlson, who resigned on Sept. 10 to become superintendent of the California Area School District.

David Lemley, a social studies teacher at the high school, was named an administrative intern to fill the vacancy created by Barbero's promotion.

The appointment of Barbero came on a 7-1 vote, with board member Lila Ayersman objecting to the fact that Barbero still has not moved into the school district. The other board members indicated, however, that they feel there are valid reasons why he continues to reside at Ronco and that he will move into the district as soon as it is possible for him to do so. His salary was set at $24,000.

Lemley, who has performed administrative duties in the past, is presently attending West Virginia University and expects to become certified as a high school principal in September of next year. His salary was set at $21,000. The board also approved 1980-81 salaries for other administrators in the district, noting that they reflected evaluations by the board personnel committee. The salaries:

Dr. Ronald J. Ferrary, superintendent, $34,100, up $3,100; Nancy Davis, curriculum coordinator, $25,080, up $2,280; Walter Stout, director of business affairs, $18,070, up $2,370; James Zollars, middle school principal, $23,903, up $1,138; Craig Younken, elementary principal, $22,302, up $2,027, and James Mathez, middle school assistant principal, $18,000.

The salaries of five maintenance specialists were also increased by 10 percent, retroactive to July 1. They are Willis Poling, maintenance supervisor, $15,488; Charles McCollum, school carpenter, $16,214; Homer Fox, high school plant manager, $12,969; Ronald J. Kiger, middle school plant manager, $10,791, and Roy Lemley Jr., district warehouseman, $11,104.

The board also took action to increase teacher starting salaries and compensation for permanent substitutes. The starting salary was increased from $8,600 to $9,725 on Level A, $10,025 on Level B, $10,225 on Level C and $10,425 on Level D. The salaries of permanent substitutes were set at the same level, with the further provision that they be granted all fringe benefits after working for at least 90 consecutive days.

In other action the board: Directed the solicitor to petition the Greene County Court for permission to sell the former West Waynesburg School for $40,000 to the Greene County Association for Retarded Citizens, with the highest appraised value on the building having been placed at $38,500.

Public Hearing Reveals More Details Of System

MT. MORRIS — Additional details of a proposed sewerage system to serve built-up sections of Perry Township in and around Mt. Morris were disclosed at the second of three public hearings held last week at the Mt. Morris fire hall.

The plan received a mixed reception from the 30 or so people who attended.

"The majority of those present seemed to realize we badly need the system, but are concerned about their ability to pay for it," G. Russell Haines, a member of the Mt. Morris Water and Sewer Authority said.

Fred J. Rupert, project manager for L. Robert Kimball and Associates, told the audience that a total gravity system has been selected as the best alternative for implementation on the basis of a cost-effective analysis, public participation, operational considerations and probable effects on the environment.

It would consist of a plant located on a one-acre tract of land along Dunkard Creek owned by Bessie Fox, which would provide both secondary and tertiary treatment to meet Department of Environmental Resources requirements. It would also require 1,780 feet of 12-inch line and 34,100 feet of eight-inch line to provide sewerage service to 327 households and business places.

Total estimated cost is $3,260,400, with federal grants providing 75 percent of this cost, leaving $1,060,000 to be raised locally.

Under the plan, $327,000 would be raised through a $1,000 tap-in fee, with no front foot charges. The balance would be obtained through a $758,000 bond issue, with maintenance of the system and retirement of the bonds requiring average monthly user charges of $22.59 to provide annual revenues of $89,998.

The facilities plan is being prepared by Kimball under a Step I grant received from Department of Housing and Urban Development. Following the third public hearing on Oct. 21, the plan will be submitted to both federal and state agencies for their review and approval, with the authority expecting to be in a position to apply for a Step II application by March of next year. Once it is received, the engineering firm would be in a position to begin design of the system to set the stage for a Step III grant.

The timetable calls for bids to be accepted in late 1982, so that construction could begin in February 1983. The system would then be in place by mid-1984.

Additional public hearings would be held at all stages of the project, the authority said. The authority pointed out that the study made by Kimball, which included a house-to-house survey, showed that 70 percent of existing on-lot disposal systems are malfunctioning. In addition, several combined sewer lines discharge raw sewage into Dunkard Creek, crating a potential health hazard.

Man Arrested

CARMICHAELS — Charges were filed Saturday against a passenger in a car involved in an accident that killed three people near the Carmichaels Clinic Sept. 13.

Kenneth Lipscomb, 32, of Carmichaels R.D. 1, was arrested at Greene County Memorial Hospital and charged with giving a false insurance policy number to get his car registered.

Lipscomb was a passenger in the car driven by his brother, William David Gephart, which struck a pickup truck, operated by Delbert John Motzer of Rices Landing, head-on along TR-112. Gephart and Motzer's wife and son died in the crash.

Police said the car driven by Gephart was owned by Lipscomb but did not have a valid registration. Police also said Lipscomb and Gephart both had suspended licenses.

Lipscomb was arraigned before Magistrate Ruth Hughes and released on $1,000 recognizance bond. A preliminary hearing has been scheduled for Sept. 24. Other charges are expected to be filed by the Carmichaels Borough police.

Nursing Home Plan Supported

(Continued From Page 1) several public hearings will be held at which complete details will be aired, including an estimate of what it will cost in terms of taxes.

The commissioners are currently considering a bond issue to be repaid over a period of years. Pawlosky said that the Curry Home is now receiving 90 percent federal reimbursement, and that the interest on such a bond issue would be eligible for 90 percent funding. In 1975, he said, funding was at the 50 percent level, which was one of the reasons the court felt it would be too costly.

"It's a big project and it has to be treated as such," Pawlosky said. "As soon as details of the funding are available to us they will be made public."

The existing nursing home facility contains 111 beds, and there is a long waiting list of people seeking admission.

was believed down in the Greene County area. Police received the call at 1:50 a.m. State police and Waynesburg Borough Police began an immediate search of the area but it wasn't until 4:40 a.m. that the location of the landing was confirmed.

Confirmation came from George and Sharon Richter, who live in a mobile home across the road from the crash site. The Richters were getting ready for work when they heard a crashing noise. Richter shined his spotlight across the road and quickly spotted "a huge light bulb."

The 210-foot-high balloon had come to rest in a wooded area about 40 yards north of Route 18. It had struck a 12,000-volt power line and knocked out service to about 80 homes in the immediate area. The balloon, made of opaque polyethylene material similar to that used in trash bags, just missed a 150,000-volt power line.

Mary Richter, who lives about 100 feet from where the balloon landed, said she heard a flapping noise and then a noise like someone dumping tin cans. State police were at the scene in minutes and tied the gondola to trees using ropes stored in the gondola.

Tom Shannon, project manager for the flight, was contacted in New York where he was awaiting the flight. He chartered a plane and flew directly to the Greene County Airport.

He was concerned about the flight recorders in the gondola and recovered the $40,000 worth of equipment aboard the craft.

Shannon told reporters the flight was being filmed by a two-member crew in preparation for a feature-length movie about the flight. "I am just thankful no one was injured," Shannon said.

The balloon, which made most of the flight at 20,000 feet, swayed dangerously close to high-tension wires and caused concern. Shannon finally asked Trooper Vaughn Eckman to fire into the balloon and deflate it before it could hit the wires.

Eckman was about ready to fire when Shannon said to wait a minute until he could call New York and again check with crew personnel. While Shannon was making the phone call, a crew member arrived on the scene and checked the power in the balloon. The power was still on and the crew member used an electric control to vent the gas. The huge balloon slowly collapsed onto the gondola and the danger was over.

The event drew hundreds of spectators and media personnel from all the major television stations within a 50-mile radius. The local state police barracks was flooded with calls from radio, newspaper and television offices.

Representatives from the Federal Aviation Agency, stationed at the Allegheny County Airport, were on the scene Tuesday afternoon investigating the incident.

Shannon, who had talked to the balloonsists in Columbus, said they were both willing to make an attempt to be the first to cross the United States in a hot air balloon.

Pose Difficult Problem

On two occasions during the past few months, police chases in Greene County have ended tragically.

In July, Waynesburg Borough police stopped a motorist who had gone through a stop sign. When he sped off as they walked toward his car, police quickly gave chase and watched him go through Morrisville at 70 miles an hour, where he almost hit another car.

They finally lost him as he passed the county airport at more than 100 miles an hour and it wasn't until hours later that they found his car laying in a field. The 20-year-old driver was dead.

Two weeks ago, Carmichaels police gave chase to a 22-year-old man who was driving recklessly. On the outskirts of town, the car being pursued passed another vehicle at high speed on the crest of a hill and slammed headon into an oncoming truck. Not only was the fleeing motorist killed, but a woman and child in the small truck died.

Police admittedly face a very difficult decision in such cases. Their job includes enforcement of traffic laws, and when a motorist attempts to elude them there's usually no way of knowing why he is running. There could be a lot more back of it than a simple attempt to avoid a traffic citation.

But when such a chase takes place, the lives of everyone who happens to be on the highway at the time is placed in danger, including those of the fleeing person and of the pursuing police officers.

At Waynesburg, police had an opportunity to record the license of the car as they walked toward it. At Carmichaels, officers knew who was in the car which they chased. In both cases it should have been possible to let them go at the time with the idea of serving the citation later.

Even if police had dropped out of the chase, the motorists may have continued to speed away and tragedy may still have resulted.

As one state trooper said, it's a situation which every patrolman faces at some time or other, and a decision has to be made immediately. But where alternatives to a high speed chase exist, they should be taken.

Between The Bookends

Marcia McKenna Biddle

The New York Times Book Review always carries small items listed under the title, "Author's Query." I wonder if anybody pays any attention to them.

These queries come from writers who are working on books of biography, and seem to be last-ditch efforts to find out something the writer can't figure out where to find for himself.

One such query asks: "For a biography of the muralist Ezra Winter, I would appreciate any information regarding letters from or to him, or conversations with or impressions by those who knew or met him."

I wonder if the writer now thinks that a lot of people who once talked to Ezra Winter are now going to write in and tell all about it. Somehow I don't think that would happen. And if they cared anything at all about Ezra Winter, I doubt that they would entrust his biography to the author of such a sentence.

Somebody else is writing a study of the letters of Mrs. William Dean Howells, and "would appreciate information pertaining to the location of any of her letters." That writer does not have an easy job — she's writing about letters, but she doesn't know where they are. It seems she might have chosen a subject she knew how to locate.

Another writer has an interesting idea: "For a work on 19th-century women photographers, I would appreciate hearing from anyone whose mother or grandmother learned the craft of photography before 1900." I wish I could help with that one, but my grandmother wasn't much for taking pictures. I could make up a grandmother — photographer, though, which sounds like fun. Somebody will probably do that, too.

Even livelier is the request: "For a book/play about the late Congressman Adam Clayton Powell, I would appreciate any correspondence or first person accounts." This query raises several questions. First person accounts, of what? Of running into the congressman in the supermarket? From what we all remember about him, even that encounter would have been interesting, but it doesn't seem likely that anybody is going to write a letter detailing anything else.

And what is a book/play? Is it one thing, or is it both?

The biggest question is: If a writer is going to work on a book/play about Adam Clayton Powell or anybody else, why doesn't he/she find out who are the people who did know him and try to talk to them him/herself? If they haven't cooperated, which they probably haven't, why would advertising in the book review section help?

Another writer shows the same weakness: "For a collection of anecdotes, remembrances and inspirations about Al Lowenstein, I would appreciate hearing from his friends, associates, and fellow toilers." This seems to be sheer audacity. Instead of hunting up the friends, associates, etc., the writer wants them all to come to him. If they would all do that, it would certainly make his work a lot easier. But why should they? If somebody wants to write a biography, it does seem that he/she ought to be prepared to do the leg work — writing letters, making phone calls, asking questions of everybody, spending days and months in various libraries, and eventually finding out where the letters are, and who the friends are, and who knows the truth about whatever happened.

It might be that one of these queries could bring forth some unknown person who had a great, untold story to tell. On the other hand, some characters would no doubt be willing to offer information, for a price. Whatever might come of the queries, trying to write a biography by advertising for friends seems like trying to start a car without any gas.

Faces From The Past—Do Your Recognize Them?

The first home economics house at what is now the Margaret Bell Miller Middle School in Waynesburg is shown above. It was originally a private residence built some years prior to World War I, the time when home economics was added to the Waynesburg curriculum. The family of the late Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Long were the last occupants of the house in about 1915. The photo is the property of Roy Hinch, of Merchantville, N. J., whose home in Waynesburg was across the street from the building.

Fact and Folklore

John O'Hara

There was "once upon a time" as the old storybook tales used to start off, that Greene County was considered on the outer rim of civilization by people of Pittsburgh and other cities.

But thanks to the automobiles, including the revered Model T's that made a multimillionaire out of their creator, most of its one time isolation has long since been removed and the rest is being polished off by the latest form of communication — the magic tube of television.

This facet of everyday life in the county surfaced again before dawn last Tuesday when a balloon in which two Arizona millionaires made an unsuccessful attempt to fly from Pacific to the Atlantic Ocean, landed on the farm of the late Jack Huffman at Reese's Mill, about two miles west of town along Route 18.

Within a matter of minutes word was being flashed coast to coast on radio and television stations that the craft had landed near Waynesburg after its owners — and occupants — had abandoned the craft near Columbus, Ohio.

It was the second time in less than two months that Greene County scenes were being viewed by a nation-wide audience and bits of information concerning the area were being babbling by network announcers on both radio and television. And many Greene Countians and scenes of the county were being viewed from coast to coast.

The earlier incident was the Waynesburg July 29th Rain Day observance which was spread nationwide by the CBS network with one of its top announcers, Charles Karalt, being here in person and greeting scores of townspeople and other county residents.

A generation or so ago the county's only notice from the Pittsburgh media was often handled in a derisive fashion, generally by young whippersnappers too poorly informed to see the quality of life enjoyed here not only by descendants of the early families who had settled here from Virginia and eastern Pennsylvania, but also by many others.

Now a much better informed generation of print and electronic journalists are perceptive enough to appreciate not only the county's natural scenic beauty and rather sedate life styles which have not been crushed under the often misleading expression of "progress" and some of them are moving here themselves.

A number of them are still employed by corporations based in Pittsburgh and don't mind making the five day a week 50 mile trip in and out of the city to enjoy the serenity of their after work hours and weekends at their new found farm homes or the village life of some of the smaller communities.

Many Waynesburgers themselves and those from other communities in the county have been interviewed "on camera" so often by visiting TV-reporters that they are acquiring a bit of stage presence and ease when being questioned by visiting newsmen — a women.

Back in the old days of railroad travel, Waynesburg was known to many Pittsburghers only by the fact of being on the south end of the old Waynesburg and Washington narrow gauge railroad that was mostly famous — or infamous — because of its many hairpin curves and the occasional incidents where a train would be delayed until some cows or other livestock could be chased off the tracks to allow the train to go through.

Many of these incidents were greatly exaggerated out of all proportion to the actual truth. In fact, the line had an enviable reputation in the railroad industry for its promptness and efficiency.

As time goes on and Greene County becomes more and more widely known not only for the many more incidents such as plane crashes, but also for its natural beauty and rich historical heritage as the Cornerstone County of Pennsylvania its legends, its beauty and its people will have more and more exposure on the magic tube and other communication media.

And on the basis of the record to date of its people, its scenic attractions and restoration of its links to the past such as the original log courthouse (reputed the only one of its kind in the United States) on East Greene Street, it will have an image unrivalled by few other counties of the tri-state area of Aaron Burr's dream of a "Pittsylvania County from the abutting portions of southwestern Pennsylvania, northwestern Virginia and southeastern Ohio will finally change from a dream to reality.

Under The Dome

Bob Eichenlaub

The Greene County commissioners have been hearing appeals during the past week from property owners who were unhappy with the decision made last April to change the property assessment ratio from 20 percent to 30 percent of market value.

Since approximately 300 of them were filed, they have set aside more than two weeks for the appeal process.

When property owners received notice that the assessed value of their land and houses would be increased would be increased by 50 percent because of the change, they were understandably disturbed. Many felt it would mean an automatic major increase in their taxes when the new ratio went into effect in 1981.

Since that time, there has been a lot of information distributed, and many people realize the ratio change of itself will not increase their taxes. Additionally, the ratio change was an administration decision which in no way involves the market value assigned to a property, and an appeal which is not based on an incorrect market value has no chance of success. It is probably for these reasons that many people who filed appeals are not showing up for their schedule hearings.

On top of this, it is very likely that county taxes in 1981 will be less than they would have been without the ratio change.

County solicitor A. J. Marion has ruled that because of the change, the county cannot increase its property tax revenues by more than five percent in 1981. Without the change, the increase would undoubtedly have been larger than that.

At the present time, the county has an 18½ mill tax levy. With Marion's ruling, this levy will have to be reduced to at least 12½ mills, and perhaps to 12 mills.

The solicitor's opinion was based on a state law which dictates that a county cannot increase its tax revenues by more than five percent in the year following a complete reassessment of all property.

The same restriction, incidentally, also applies to boroughs and townships, so that if Marion is correct they will also be forced to sharply reduce their tax millages in 1981. School districts are permitted an increase of 10 percent rather than five percent.

At any rate, assessment appeals which were triggered by fear that there would be a sharp increase in county taxes next year now seem rather pointless.

Greene Letterbox

To The Editor:

Anne Bower, in her explanation of the Wheeling Creek Watershed Project published in the Observer-Reporter of Sept. 18, chides me for including in the prime farmland recommended for flooding by the USDA Soil Conservation Service (SCS) in the first draft Environmental Impact Statement (EIS) 24 acres of farmland of "statewide importance."

I was unable to find a defined distinction between these categories and so lumped them together.

Mrs. Bower also corrects me for saying the Watershed Commission and United States Steel Corp. will be pressing for a repetition of this choice in the revised draft EIS. I, of course, should have said that these entities would be pressing for the flooding only of Enlow Fork, and the Watershed Commission alone for a dry dam on Dunkard Fork.

I am, of course, aware that as a result of criticism of the first draft EIS the foolish recreation project on Dunkard Fork was dropped. Because of this, and perhaps because of the Watershed Commission's lack of funds, a dry dam has been chosen by the commission for that location. Whether money can be found by the commission to pay its share is still a question. Dry dams, as John Allen of U. S. Steel has told the watershed commission, are almost as disruptive as wet dams. In these particulars I am willing to be corrected.

Mrs. Bower's statement that the agreement gives the commission the right to reduce U.S. Steel's water allotment is another matter. The right that is given in Section 11f of the draft agreement of May 2, 1980 is the right of the commission to petition the Greene County Court of Common Pleas to reduce the allotment to USS on the basis of a reduction in need by USS.

After the legal arguments are all in, the court and not the watershed commission will decide whether the supply to USS will be reduced. I believe that my statement that the use of 79 percent of the water will go to USS for as long as it needs it can stand uncorrected.

USS must give the commission two years notice as to when it will require the water, but nowhere in the agreement is any date given as to when USS must start or stop using the water.

If the agreement as written on May 2 comes into effect USS will have its water ready and waiting for its use anytime it wants it, or for the use of anyone to whom it chooses to assign its rights for as long as the mine can be usefully operated. Section 11f also provides for the right of the watershed commission to petition the court in the event of severe drought or other emergency which would require a change in allotment to provide for the welfare of those receiving water — a very remote contingency.

I did not wonder about the question of water available for domestic water supply. I suggested that George R. Carter Jr. give the figures on how much water would be available on a per capita basis for whatever population he is forecasting. Actually the amount of water for public use calculated from Section 11 of the agreement is 329,184 gallons a day.

Mrs. Bower's rather modest projection of 2,500 people is much lower than the amazing growth figures we've been reading and hearing about for western Greene County. These 2,500 people would have plenty of water after, of course, all the pumps and pipes and filters and connections and meters and billing machines have been installed, but would they be able to pay for it?

People should be reminded that there was no talk about "municipal water supply" before USS got involved in the project in 1977. The industrial supply for that corporation is the heart of the matter and no amount of conversation about domestic use can obscure this fact.

Water is a valuable resource. It is neither created nor increased in amount by being impounded, and the best way to conserve it is to leave the areas in which it occurs undisturbed.

Natural areas, contrary to the opinion of the dam seekers, are not worthless, and once they are destroyed they cannot be restored. Farmland, even in small amounts, should not be wasted for industrial convenience. Dams, wet or dry, will reduce farmland, destroy natural areas, and cost Greene County and Washington County taxpayers without affording these citizens any substantial benefit.

Plans to change western Greene County from a rural to an industrial area with no thought about the consequences should not go unopposed. This was the thrust of my letter and Mrs. Bower does not address this issue.

Cancer Death Rate Given

According to figures released recently by the Pennsylvania Department of Health, Greene County was slightly below the state average of cancer deaths per 100,000 population during 1978. During 1978, 82 cancer related deaths were recorded in Greene County, giving it a mortality rate of 208.1 persons per 100,000 population.

River Museum Very Interesting, But Ignored

By JIM MOORE
Staff Writer

GREENSBORO — The interesting, but too much ignored, Mon Center River Museum at Greensboro will soon exhibit a unique attraction — a fully-operable river lock.

The brain child of Ernest S. Gabler, one of the early founders of the museum, the lock will contain about 150 gallons of water and will be controlled from a small pilot house constructed near the ceiling and overlooking the 12 by 24 foot model.

It took Gabler, a veteran of 39 years on river barges, to figure out how to construct the huge working model on the second floor of the building. Through trial and error, modification of unrelated hardware and a lot of ingenuity, the model locks will be in operation by the first of the year.

Gabler, a native of Greensboro, was head riverman at Duquesne Light's Warwick 2 Mine and was employed there for almost four decades. He also served two hitchs in the U.S. Navy.

On his first tour which began in 1941, Gabler was stationed on Guadalcanal repairing landing craft during the massive invasion by the U.S. Marines. He joined the Naval Reserve after the war and in 1951 again entered active service when the Korean Conflict became heated.

He was stationed in Hawaii on tug boats and when the boats were badly needed in Sasebo, Japan, the U.S. Navy called for volunteers. He preferred duty in Hawaii but was sent to Japan anyway.

In addition to the maritime background, Gabler apparently inherited the love of water from his grandfather and a great-uncle, both of whom served as cooks aboard various boats on the river.

Although several local residents took intense interest in forming a river museum at Greensboro, it was Gabler who took the helm and eventually steered the chartered organization to a 76-year-old elementary school.

The Southeastern Greene School Board turned over the two-story, stone structure to the borough, which in turn deeded the property to the Mon Center organization.

Since 1974, when hundreds of area residents joined the organization and donated time, memorabilia and elbow grease to the venture, the museum has become a showplace for river buffs and those interested in local history.

On the top floor, the River Room attracts the most visitors with hundreds of pictures of the various boats on the river and scores of items used aboard the boats. Probably the oldest item on display is a 10-foot gig used to spear fish in the river. The gig was owned by Gabler's grandfather and was being used back in the 19th century.

From floor to ceiling, there are books, maps, model boats, pictures and even petroglyphs, rocks found along the river bank on which there is Indian writing.

A separate room houses the Rev. John Corbly Memorial Room and contains household items, pictures and a unique "hair piece" made from human hair in the form of flowers. The history of Corbly, who was born in London and came to the United States at the age of 14, is well displayed.

On the first floor, the Heritage Room draws hundreds of visitors. Exhibits include a register from the old Monongahela House with the name of Ulysses S. Grant jumping right out at you. Other exhibits include old pianos, a buggy, dishes and pottery from New Geneva across the river, clothing and an Edison Amberola and the discs that go with it.

Most of the items have been donated by local individuals and several corporations, especially Consolidation Coal Company, have been helpful in stocking the museum.

The building, formerly an eyesore, has received a new roof, new windows and many coats of paint and today is a focal point of this small, river community. Also on the grounds is a log cabin that was once a two-story home. It was razed and completely rebuilt next to the museum.

A huge community room has been completed on the first floor and the 500-member Monongahela River Buffs Association makes good use of the room.

Arts and crafts are a popular pastime in the building and two rooms are reserved for this purpose.

Greensboro, where several flat boats for the Lewis and Clark Expedition were constructed, can be proud of the efforts by so many citizens because the museum is a "must" for anyone interested in Greene County and Monongahela River history.

Although it would seem the museum contains every possible item found on boats, Gabler is still looking for a couple of engine room telegraphs. Hopefully, he can find one or two before the community celebrates its bicentennial next year.

Jackets Win On Skill

By ROBIN ROBERTS
Sports Writer

WAYNESBURG — Waynesburg College football coach Hayden Buckley refers to his quarterbacks, defensive backs, wide receivers and kickers as his skilled people.

And Saturday they showed considerable skill in leading the Yellow Jackets to a 24-7 win over previously unbeaten Geneva.

Waynesburg safety Sam Procida tied a school pass interception record by snaring four Geneva aeriels, as many catches as the top Golden Tornado receiver. Sophomore quarterback Mike Forbes ran for one touchdown, threw for two more and completed five of 15 passes for 91 yards. Senior split receiver Don Dock had two receptions, one a 69-yard bomb and placekicker Ted Rodavich, (another sophomore) booted a field goal, three conversion points and completed a key fourth down pass from a fake field goal attempt which proved the key in the Jackets' final touchdown of the game. "Our skilled people really came through for us today. Our secondary is very good, in two games we have eight interceptions and Procida has five and could have a couple more," Buckley said after the game. Procida, a junior from Jeannette, tied a school record with his four interceptions. On two other occasions a Jacket defender had intercepted four passes in a game, Dave Clelland against Niagara in 1948 and Harry Theofiledes against Lycoming in 1964. Three of the interceptions eventually led to Jacket scores. Things started out poorly for Waynesburg as the Tornadoes took the opening kickoff and pushed from their own 20 into the Yellow Jackets' end zone on 16 plays, with quarterback Ed Hartman connecting with tight end Ray Bazzoli for a seven-yard score. Frank Dell's placement made it 7-0 Geneva with less than 10 minutes gone from the clock. "That first series we were giving them the third and long play and had to make some adjustments and get some things straightened out. After that things went pretty well," Buckley said. It appeared the Jackets were going to strike right back as they drove to the Tornadoes' seven, but the drive stalled there and Rodavich was called in to attempt field goal, but the normally sure handed Procida fumbled the snap from center and the kick was blocked. Geneva cornerback John Elffers scooped up the ball and was finally pulled down from behind by Rodavich at the Jacket 45. "Ted's speed saved us from going down by two touchdowns on that play," Buckley said. Midway through the second quarter Procida got his first steal at the Geneva 39. Nine plays later, Forbes slammed into the Geneva end zone from a yard out and Rodavich's kick knotted the score at 7-7.

On the second play of the ensuing Geneva series, Procida stepped in front of another Hartman pass at the Geneva 25. This interception led to Rodavich's 24-yard field goal with just six seconds left in the half and gave the Jackets a 10-7 lead at the intermission. The score which appeared to break the back of the Tornadoes came late in the third quarter when Forbes connected with Dock on the 69-yard bomb which gave Waynesburg a 17-7 lead. But, Procida and the Jackets hadn't had enough. Procida's third theft of the afternoon came at the Jacket 48. It and Rodavich's 13-yard completion to Keith Davis from the fake field goal alignment led to Forbes' three yard scoring strike to tight end Don DeCicco with 11:32 still remaining in the game.

"That was the best Geneva team we've played in the eight years I've been at Waynesburg," Buckley said. "I was well pleased with the game. I thought we did a lot of things very well for the second game of the season. Forbes threw the ball well, the young linebackers played well and we got things rolling offensively. We were much improved over the first game (a 23-21 loss to Indiana). "Keith Davis gave us his usual good, solid game at running back, too," Buckley said. Indeed, Davis had 136 yards in 25 carries. He went over the 100 yard mark with over five minutes remaining in the first half. "They started keying of Keith after the first half and that simply opened things up for Mike (Forbes) to keep the ball on the option," Buckley pointed out. Forbes ended the game as its second leading rusher with 68 yards in 13 carries. Overall, the Jackets had 255 yards on the ground and another 104 through the air.

Geneva was limited to 49 yards rushing and 227 overall. Waynesburg is off next weekend before returning to action Oct. 4 at Canisius.

Local Man Breaks The County Pigeon Barrier

By JIM MOORE
Staff Writer

WAYNESBURG — It certainly doesn't rank with breaking the four-minute mile or the sound barrier but Charles Haring of Waynesburg R.D.1 has broken the pigeon barrier in Greene County.

Believed to be the only active pigeon racer in the county, Haring's pigeons recently won a first and second prize in a 150-mile race. He is hoping the double victory will bring back several former racers from the county who apparently quit after failing to defeat more experienced pigeon handlers in the district.

A few years ago, there were a half dozen pigeon racers in Greene County. Pigeon clubs have been active for many years in Washington, Fayette and Westmoreland Counties and because of their vast experience, local racers were being shut out in competition.

Haring, a mechanic with Suwak Trucking Company in Washington, became interested in pigeons when his father Joseph was active in racing. He now has about 70 pigeons at his home on Mack Coal Company Hill near the Youth Development Center.

Haring is a member of the Southern Combine which is composed of several pigeon clubs in Southwestern Pennsylvania. There are two national clubs with a membership numbering in the thousands.

Pigeon owners enter their birds in two categories: young birds, which must be one year or younger, and older birds. The pigeons fly in races up to 600 miles. Races are held each weekend during the warm months and starting places are scheduled in several communities in Ohio and Pennsylvania.

Each bird, which has his own identification tag on his leg, also has a small capsule containing information. The capsule is dropped into a special timing clock owned by each handler and the time is registered automatically on a strip of paper inside the clock.

Haring enjoys sitting on his lawn with a cool brew in the evening waiting for his birds to return home. It also saves precious seconds if he can get to the bird and time it as soon as possible.

It costs Haring about $70 a month to care for his birds. Pigeon candy, which contains the grit they must have, is selling for $26 for a hundred pounds. Whole grain corn and Canadian peas are a daily diet also. There is also special pigeon conditioner available for the serious bird fanciers.

Raise them right and perhaps you can get as high as $100 for each bird at the monthly pigeon auction.

Haring has been using his own training methods. He came to realize that perhaps the other bird owners were keeping secrets or even giving him some bad information to stifle the competition. It's very common for the bird owners to place a friendly bet at the weekend races.

He takes the new birds out for one mile and lets them go. He progresses to longer distances as the birds learn to find their way back.

He loses a few birds who fail to find their way back but the biggest danger comes from owls. He lost six birds in two days to an owl that found its way into the loft. Cats and blacksnakes also take their toll of young birds, he said.

To most people, pigeons are creatures that hang around statues and public buildings. Actually, there are 290 species of pigeons and some grow as large as chickens. They are used for racing, recreation, food, show and messengers. The 150 varieties of domestic pigeons was reduced by one in 1914 when the last passenger pigeon died in a Cincinnati zoo. The species became extinct largely because the public killed them by the thousands.

The next time you see a pigeon getting a drink notice it will not tip its head with each sip as other birds do. Instead, it will thrust its beak into the water and pump liquid down its throat much like a horse. Unlike humans and most other animals, pigeons tend to mate for life according to most sources.

A Light On The Dock

By ROBIN ROBERTS
Sports Writer

WAYNESBURG — Off the football field Waynesburg College wide receiver Don Dock seems like a quiet, unobtrusive guy. The type of person who would go out of his way to stay out of the limelight.

On the field he's in the spotlight on nearly every play, running deep patterns, or cracking back on linebackers who often outweigh him by 30 or 35 pounds. All of this action normally occurs deep in the opponents' secondary, visible to all, unlike linemen who are hidden from the eyes of spectators.

Dock, one of three seniors of the Yellow Jacket squad, admits that his hardest job isn't catching passes or out maneuvering defenders. It's coming back on linebackers for crack-back blocks.

The 6-0, 175-pound senior from Lexington, Va. had four receptions for 93 yards (including a 55-yard touchdown bomb from quarterback Mike Forbes) in last week's 23-21 loss to Indiana (Pa.) University. But that was easy.

"Cracking back on the linebackers is probably my hardest job. There are a lot of things you have to do right. You have to hit the linebacker above the waist for instance. A lot of those guys weigh 225 to 230 pounds, that means they're a lot bigger than me, sometimes 30 or 35 pounds bigger," Dock said.

As a junior Dock had 10 receptions for 326 yards an average of 20.4 yards per catch to lead Waynesburg in receiving. During the Indiana game he averaged better than 23 yards per catch.

It was the 55-yard bomb to Dock which brought the Yellow Jackets to within two points of Indiana after the visitors had constructed a seemingly insurmountable 23-7 lead.

"Sure, we were disappointed about the loss to Indiana, but I still think we have a nice football team here.

"We had some success with some of the plays we ran against Indiana, but there were a lot of things we didn't do that other teams are going to see before the end of this season," Dock said.

The Jackets play their second home game of the year Saturday with Geneva, a team which last week blasted Thiel 25-6 in its opener.

"We have to get the Indiana game out of our minds and get set for Geneva. We have some pretty good freshmen who played well in their first game Saturday and I feel that having two straight games at home will help them."

Ironically, during his senior year in high school Dock was recruited by a Bill Tornabene, a young coach from Virginia Military Institute, who is now top assisttant to Waynesburg coach Hayden Buckley.

"Coach Tornabene recruited me when I was in high school for VMI, but I decided that the military-type education wasn't for me and he mentioned Waynesburg. Now we're both here," Dock said.

Buckley, though naturally disappointed by Saturday's loss, was still pleased with the performance of his Yellow Jackets. "We saw a lot of positive things in the Indiana game. We found ourselves a quarterback, a punter, a couple of freshmen offensive linemen we needed, and some wide receivers," Buckley said.

The quarterback is Forbes who completed 12 of 24 passes for 209 yards and two touchdowns. The punter is freshman Kirk Neal from Duquesne High School who averaged over 45 yards per kick on seven punts during the Indiana game.

Freshmen Scott Schifko from Waynesburg and Ralph Pantalone from Greensburg Central Catholic are the linemen who have secured their starting jobs and Ted Rodavich, from Carmichaels, who last year as a freshman handled just kickoff and placement kicking for Waynesburg is now also doubling as a wide receiver, lining up opposite Dock.

Creates New Engine

WAYNESBURG — A Waynesburg College alumnus is part of a research and development group involved in the development of a new automobile engine that will burn on a wide-range of fuels with less pollution.

J. Randolph Morgan, a 1930 graduate, is part of a research group developing the continuous combustion engine. The engine, considered by many to be a major breakthrough in design and engineering, emits a cleaner exhaust than traditional combustion engines.

"Morgan's engine controls the burning process better," said Dr. David K. Walker, professor of physics at Waynesburg College. "Fuel is burned constantly in one chamber, and then the gases are sent from the chamber to move the pistons."

In conventional engines, Walker said, burning occurs in spurts, with each spurt controlling the movement of one piston. The result is the release of far more toxic substances during operation.

Another advantage of the continuous combustion engine is its ability to burn various types of fuels. According to Walker, the engine will also burn diesel fuel.

"This is important," he said, "because with current energy shortages, you don't know what will be available in the future at gas stations."

Walker concluded, "Morgan's continuous combustion engine is basically similar to a conventional engine, with the addition of a compression chamber. Therefore, a switchover by automobile manufacturers to such an engine would not mean a large rise in car costs."

The Electric Consumer's Corner

Why do you estimate my electric bill every other month?

To reduce expenses which saves money for customers. Reading electric meters every other month instead of monthly and estimating bills for the in-between months save nearly one-and-a-half-million dollars annually.

That's because we need 56 fewer meter readers and vehicles. In addition, we save the cost of an estimated 78,000 gallons of gasoline each year. All of these savings help hold down the price you pay for electricity.

How do you estimate my bill?

For the months we don't read your meter, we base your usage on the meter reading for the corresponding period of a year ago. Then we bill you for approximately the same amount of electricity you used at that time.

Of course, when we read your meter the next month, we determine the actual amount you've used during the previous two-month period. We deduct your estimated use for the prior month from this two-months' reading and bill you for the difference.

So over the two-month period, you're billed only for the exact amount of electricity used during that time.

Can I read my own meter for the in-between months?

Yes,
